In view of the many totally exempt classes—ranging from those whose incomes are less than $1,000, at one end of the scale, to labor unions and savings banks among the wealthy—the average of taxable holdings of Liberty bonds must be vastly below $5,000,000. All such holdings pay lower, and generally much lower, rates of tax.

That the Administration at Washington, in the exigencies of the late war and in view of its possible indefinite continuance, erred in this matter is obvious, nor should the blunder be counted against them under the circumstances. But neither the Democratic majority in the present Congress, nor the Republican one in the next, nor, far less, Mr. Glass, the new Secretary of the Treasury, can afford to now repeat that blunder in respect to the impending Fifth Liberty Loan.

Lest it be said that the creation of $6,000,000,000 of bonds, nontaxable as to income, would play into the hands of the very rich persons and corporations, it must be remembered that they now have a rapidly growing and limitless field for such tax-free investments in State, city, and municipal securities. While there may be an objection to creating a class of tax-free investors, there can certainly be none to enlarging the already limitless class of tax-free bonds, provided that in so doing the Federal Government realizes at the outset, in the rate at which it borrows, all or more than the tax can amount to.

Making the Fifth Loan tax free would invite subscriptions by individuals and corporations of relatively small means, who lack the knowledge and opportunity which the very rich enjoy with regard to State and municipal securities, and enable the Government to borrow at a much lower rate of interest.

Rumanian and Polish Delegates.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It has been officially announced that Belgium and Serbia will have three delegates, instead of two, at the Peace Conference. The reason for this decision is probably because both countries are supposed to have suffered more than other small countries, which are represented by two delegates only. If this is the reason, the great Powers have done an injustice toward Rumania and Poland. For these countries have suffered by the havoc of the war as much as Belgium and Serbia.

But the decision is not justified also from the viewpoint of population. Both Belgium and Serbia, with the other Jugoslavs, do not number more than eight and ten million inhabitants, respectively, while Poland's and Rumania's populations amount to fifteen millions each. Besides this, the fact that Rumania has been in a certain sense the scapegoat of the Allies should entitle this country to a better treatment.

By allowing the two small countries the privilege of having three delegates, the Allies established a distinction which is neither just nor fair. The distinction is likely to arouse resentment among the Rumanian and Polish nations.

"WHERE THE TREE FALLETH."

"Where the tree falleth, there shall it be."

That great American and patriot,
Who voiced the ancient words, lies cold
in death,
No regal sepulchre his resting-place,
But bare brown earth beneath the naked trees:
No martial music beat beside his bier,
But distant booming of the surge, that broke
The silence of the everlasting hills.
Thus he sleeps amid the things he loved,
And in a quiet grave in far-off France
His gallant son lies buried—splendid boy,
Who flew on eagle wings, untried, untrained,
Yet fearless mounted ever in the blue,
And there found glorious death and deathless glory.
On wings invisible his spirit soared,
And where his broken body fell, it rests.

"Where the tree falleth, there shall
it be."
The fields of France and Flanders will be green
With buds of Spring, and myriad birds will sing
Above the crosses gleaming in the sun.
They sleep so quiet there, our soldier dead!
Shall we disturb their rest? Ah, say not so!
For we may love them there as well as here,
And Heaven will smile on them as graciously.
They gave so gladly of their glorious youth,
And now they proudly lie among their peers.
Disturb them not; their splendid work is done,
Wrapped in the starry flag they loved
so well—
They sleep their dreamless, everlasting sleep.
The red of poppies marks each resting-place,
With white of lilies that they died to save,
And Heaven's own blue smiles from behind the stars.

FORD'S ADVICE TO BOYS.

Doesn't Believe in Bank Accounts—Tells How to Spend Change.

Here is some advice from Henry Ford to the youth of this country, in the February number of The American Boy:

"Frankly, I do not believe in bank accounts for boys because they so often give boys a wrong idea as to how to get ahead. It is all very nice to save up for a rainy day when you grow up, but there is no reason why boys should wrap their foundation around their bank accounts. The point I want to make is here:

"Invest your spare change in bits of mechanism—if you are a boy who has an inclination for mechanical things.

"Invest your spare change in good reading matter—if you are inclined to be studious.

"I do not mean, by this, to buy old bits of junk, take them apart, and then throw them aside. I do not mean for you to buy books, read them, and put them on the shelf without a thought of future reference.

"I mean to invest money wisely, and to get the maximum amount of good out of it.

"If you buy an old engine, study it. Get down to the base of things. Teach yourself the things that will come in handy later on. Learn why certain wheels that are put together in a certain way co-ordinate and 'work.' Learn the principle of the thing—learn everything there is to learn about it. In other words, get more than your money's worth in knowledge—in practical knowledge—and you will gain a foundation in mechanics. You will have something to stand beside you later on, for the things you learn through your own labors are the things you learn well. They are the things that stay with you.

"If you read, read what is good and get all the good there is in it. Read to get your own conception of the author's meaning, and do some thinking on your own account; often you will find thoughts back of certain paragraphs which the author didn't express, which he couldn't express, because you will reason from facts you know and fit things into your own desires and ambitions. The art of digesting facts, and retaining them, in youth, will remain.

"Get ideas.

"The men who command the largest salaries in the industrial life of the world today are the men who have ideas and who work them out to success."

WILSON ANSWERS APPEAL.

Says Cotton Exports to Enemy Lands Are Being Considered.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Replying to a request from members of Congress from cotton-growing States that all embargoes on cotton exports to non-enemy countries be lifted, and that shipments to Germany and Austria be permitted as soon as possible, President Wilson today cabled Senator Smith of South Carolina as follows:

"Referring to the telegram of Jan. 17 sent by yourself and other members of Congress, cotton may now be exported to all countries in amounts adequate for their needs. Further exports to or for account of enemy countries raise important questions of policy which are the subject of attentive consideration by the associated Governments."

After reading the President's message, officials of the War Trade Board said it evidently had been garbled in transmission. They declared that no cotton had been shipped to enemy countries, and that none would be until the question of the economic blockade of the Central Powers had been settled at the Paris Peace Conference.

Pointing out that the President's message referred to the fact that the question of this blockade now was being considered by the associated nations, these officials said the statement that cotton was being exported to "all countries" must have referred to the allied countries and neutrals. All restrictions as to cotton movement to those countries were removed some time ago.

Control over the destination of all ships leaving American ports was retained by the War Trade Board, it was said, through the system of licensing fuel coal. The board had received no instructions to permit any ships to proceed for ports in enemy countries, it was declared. Even ships carrying food relief to southern Europe were required to proceed to Gibraltar, and their further movement was by agreement among the associated powers.

SUPPORT LANE'S LAND PLAN

Women's Committee of Defense Society Urges Favorable Action.

The Women's National Committee of the American Defense Society, of which Miss Elisabeth Marbury is Chairman, yesterday announced that it had telegraphed to the members of the Appropriations Committee of the House urging a favorable report on Secretary Lane's Land Settlement bill. The measure aims to provide land for returned soldiers, and is said to have had the approval of President Wilson.

"The Women's National Committee of the American Defense Society," the telegram read, "urges you as a representative of our interests, owing to the disturbing economic conditions now prevailing throughout the United States, to recommend without delay the passing of the Land Settlement bill. Providing, as this will do, for immediate and varied employment of the returning and demobilized troops, offering as it does the Government's assistance toward the establishment and the growth of homes, we cannot impress upon you too forcibly the need of prompt and favorable action so far as this practical solution of many of our present labor problems is concerned."

Miss Marbury issued an appeal to citizens to write their Congressmen along these lines.

Y.W.C.A. BUSY IN ARCHANGEL

Hostess House Entertains Soldiers —More Workers to Sail.

Nine Secretaries of the Young Women's Christian Association are managing a Hostess House, which has an average daily attendance of 350, in Archangel, Russia, helping in three canteens for soldiers in the city and two on railroads, and entertaining the soldiers in hospitals as part of their work, according to a cable dispatch received yesterday by the National Board of the Y. W. C. A.

The message contained a request for ten additional workers, stating that the need was imperative, as recreation work for girls had been almost abandoned in order to meet the needs of the American Expeditionary Force.

Three Secretaries, Miss Lillian Hull of Chillicothe, Ohio, Dr. Estelle Ford Warner of Portland, Ore., and Miss Helen Fair of Topeka, Kan., will sail next Tuesday for Russia. Two others left early this month and more are preparing to sail.

LISTS "SIR JOHN PERSHING."

British Who's Who Also Adds "G. C. B." to General's Name.

The British Who's Who, a copy of the 1919 issue of which has just been received here, lists the Commander in Chief of the American Expeditionary Forces in France as "General Sir John Joseph Pershing, G. C. B."

King George awarded the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath to General Pershing on July 17, 1918, and in August King George on a visit to France personally gave the decoration to him. The award of the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath to a British subject automatically makes a Knight of the recipient and gives him the right to prefix "Sir" to his name.

The decoration given General Pershing, however, was an honorary one, and it was said at the time that the American Commander would not receive the title of "Sir," as he was not a British subject.

URGES NEW METHODS TO GOVERN LABOR

R. J. Caldwell of Industrial Commission Wants Democratic Principles Applied.

WOULD ELIMINATE STRIFE

Pleads for the "Rule of Reason," Saying Industry Has Been Ruled as an Oligarchy.

R. J. Caldwell, head of the Connecticut Mills, and a member of the recently appointed United States Industrial and Economic Commission, which will sail today for Europe, where surveys of the industrial situation will be made, said yesterday in an address at a farewell luncheon given in his honor by friends and associates at the Lawyers' Club that the people of the United States would aid in carrying on the work of binding up the wounds of the European democracies. Unless this was done, he said, the world faced the menace of Bolshevism. Continuing he said:

"In this cataclysm of social and political events, the happenings are too rapid for labor to adjust itself to them. In so vast a contest of prodigious elements any strife must be severe. Can we not eliminate the contest and the strife? Can we not apply the rule of reason here? In our Revolutionary War the rule of reason was not applied. We were governed without our consent, and taxed without representation. We are relatively free from that condition now in politics—in theory at least. But in these years we have continued to rule our industry as an oligarchy. We regulate wages arbitrarily—save in a relatively few instances, where labor unions are able to intervene. We refuse to consult with the workers about their own working conditions. We have seen it here in this city in the waiters' strike.

"What harm can it do to extend the application of democratic principles to industry? They have proved themselves in government. Is it not reasonable to suppose that they will prove equally applicable to industry? The answer is—it has been so proved by the Standard Oil Company and others. It is the order of the day and must be; nothing else will suffice.

"Labor cannot longer be regarded as a commodity, which, like rubber and wheat, can be stored on the shelf or in the bin in slack season for times of greater demand. Working men and women are living souls—as hungry in times of famine as in times of plenty—and they have come to realize that they are souls, and not merchandise and must be treated accordingly. Every business must in times of plenty provide an insurance fund for times of famine, and every business must govern all of its members by the consent of the governed.

"When history is making so fast shall we be found lagging behind? I think not. In these strenuous times I believe America will not fail herself or her neighbors. Even though we may not be able to read our course entirely clear, still we shall press onward, doing the right as God gives us to see the right, realizing that whatever the future betides, the cost of meeting conditions will never be less than right now."

W. Bourke Cockran, another speaker, in discussing European conditions, said:

"A little over one hundred years ago at the Peace Council of Vienna, rulers met and after deliberating, felt they had settled the government of the people of the world forever; that there would never be a change or another war. At that time there were three forms of government—a new democracy in the United States, the aristocratic form in England and autocracy all over the rest of the world. Look at the changes today—autocracy swept from the face of the earth never to return and the Republican form in the ascendancy. Today we are faced with two extremes—republicanism and anarchism. I have always been a firm believer in the rule of the majority and I think that out of the chaos which now reigns in foreign lands there will come an equitable form of government. A Government which has ruled for hundreds of years cannot be torn asunder and a new form placed in control without some ill effects."

Others who spoke were John B. Stanchfield, George Gordon Battle, Congressman Simeon D. Fess of Ohio, Jules S. Bache, and Dorr E. Felt.

BRITISH AIR FORCE LARGEST

Had 294,000 Officers and Men When the War Ended.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—Great Britain was pre-eminent in aviation at the close of the war, when her air force was the largest in the world, according to a report made public today. It fought on more fronts than the air service of any other nation and its successes were proportionately greater, it is said.

In August, 1914, the British naval and military air services together mustered only 285 officers and 1,853 men of other ranks. In November, 1918, there were 30,000 officers and 264,000 men. At the outbreak of the war Great Britain had 166 airplanes, forty-five seaplanes, and seven airships, while at the close of hostilities she had 21,000 airplanes, 1,300 seaplanes, and 103 airships. Besides this there were 25,000 airplanes and seaplanes being built and 55,000 airplane engines under contract.

The Women's Royal Air Force, which was not in existence in 1914, numbered at the close of the hostilities 25,000.

DENY SECRET PRISON CAMPS

Despite Germans' Assertions, Allied Inquiry Still Continues.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—Germany has no secret prison camps in existence and has never maintained any, her authorities have assured the Dutch Minister at Berlin, according to an announcement by the British Committee on Prisoners of War.

The Dutch Minister, the announcement adds, says there is no evidence of the existence of such camps, but searching parties, however, are still in Germany seeking allied prisoners whose whereabouts have not been reported.

IGNORANT OF NEW CABLES.

Officials in Washington Know Nothing of Reported Deal with Japan.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Both at the State and Postoffice Departments the statement was made this afternoon that nothing was known to substantiate the report sent from San Francisco last night to the effect that Japan and the United States are to lay two new cables between the two countries in the next two years to be under the joint control and operation of the two countries.

At the Postoffice Department it was said that nothing was known of the matter and that in any event such a matter properly would come under the State Department. Acting Secretary of State Polk said the State Department, so far as he was aware, knew nothing of the projects. Assistant Secretary Breckenridge Long said he knew nothing of the matter, and that if such negotiations had come before the State Department he would be aware of them.

BROOKLYN GREETS HER OWN SOLDIERS

Crowd Welcoming Boats to Go Out in 80-Mile Gale to Meet Old 13th Artillery.

OFFICERS PRAISE REGIMENT

Declare Organization Upheld Its Civil War Record in Fiercest Fighting of Present War.

The northwest gale which, according to the Weather Bureau, attained a velocity of eighty-four miles an hour at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, did not deter the enthusiastic Brooklynites from giving their soldiers a hearty welcome when they arrived from France on the United States battleships Louisiana and New Hampshire.

There were 1,818 officers and men in the 59th Coast Artillery, which was the old 13th New York Coast Artillery, divided equally between the two warships and there was fully that number of relatives and friends that went down the bay on the excursion boat Highlander and the Police Boat Patrol with bands, flags, and megaphones to greet them. Many had to be left behind because the Highlander was so crowded that the Captain would take no more on board because of the gale. The Patrol had about 300 on board.

The Patrol was first down the bay to greet the 300 sick and wounded troops on the hospital ship Mercy and accompanied her to Pier 45 North River and then steamed back to the Statue of Liberty to meet the 1,145 troops on board the Goentoer, which included the 102d Trench Mortar Battery, the first unit of the 27th Division to return home.

Louisiana Brings 928.

The Louisiana came up the Bay first with thirty-three officers and 887 men of the 59th Coast Artillery, including Batteries A, B, and part of C, the Headquarters and Supply Companies, and nine casual officers and five civilians. As she neared the Patrol, a strong lunged young man with a megaphone took up a position by the rail and proceeded to call the members of the old 13th Regiment by name so that their folks could greet them.

"Is Bill Smith there?" he would yell. Then the soldiers would summon Bill Smith to come up to the rail and form a half circle about the happy soldier while his relatives and friends greeted him.

After the Louisiana had been made fast the Patrol, followed by the Highlander, went down the bay again to meet the New Hampshire, which brought 31 officers and 874 men of the 59th, comprising Batteries D, E, and part of C with 2 officers and 14 men of the 59th Coast Artillery and 34 casual officers and soldiers.

On board the Highlander were Borough President Edward Riegelmann, Colonel Clarence Wilbur Smith of the 13th Regiment, Dr. Charles G. Bishop, President of the Over Here Association, and Mrs. Sydney Grant, wife of Colonel Grant, who commanded the 59th Coast Artillery in France and who remains there in charge of a debarkation port. On the Patrol were Special Deputy Police Commissioner Rodman Wanamaker, Chairman of the Mayor's Welcome Committee; Colonel W. E. Wood, uniformed head of the New York Police Reserves, Mrs. John J. Hylan, John J. Smith, the Mayor's Executive Secretary, and many other city officials, and the Red Cross, K. of C., Y. M. C. A. and Salvation Army workers carrying comforts for the men.

Two Soldiers Die on Trip.

The Louisiana and the New Hampshire left Brest on Jan. 8 and had fine weather all the way. Two soldiers of the 59th died of pneumonia on the Louisiana on the voyage home—Private John Robinson, Battery A, of Salt Lake, and Private Angelo Macchio of Utica, N. Y. Officers of the 59th said yesterday that the regiment was at Romagne, near Sedan when the armistice was signed on Nov. 11. The officers also said that the 1st and 2d Battalions received two citations each, the 3d Battalion one citation, and the regiment as a whole received two army citations for its good work in the Argonne Forest and St. Mihiel sectors.

Old 13th Upheld Its Record.

Colonel Richard K. Cravens, former commander at Fort Hamilton, who was in charge of the 59th Regiment, returned on the Louisiana, as did Major [illegible] Harris of 1,361 Seventy-seventh Street, Bay Ridge, an original officer of the old 13th Regiment, who [illegible] with his battalion and said that the old 13th had upheld all its traditions dating back to civil war days. [illegible] saw some of the fiercest fighting in the war, the officers said. [illegible] there were only twelve casualties on the battlefield, two killed and ten wounded.

The effect of the heavy barrage of high explosive shells fired by the regiment's guns at St. Mihiel was shown, the officers, when the American [illegible] crossed the lines to find not a [illegible] soldier left alive on the ground. The officers also stated that the 59th Coast Artillery was the first heavy artillery to cross No Man's Land in advance of the light artillery, and they believed it was also the first time in the

The hospital ship Mercy brought 286 stretcher cases and 102 other sick and wounded from St. Nazaire, which she left on Jan. 7, taking the southerly course, calling at Bermuda on Jan. 21, where a stop of two days was made. The patients were all transferred to the Greenhut Hospital except the officers, who went to the Polyclinic Hospital. James Springs of Company B, 137th Infantry, of Seguin, Texas, a convalescent from peritonitis following gunshot wounds, died on the trip.

Four hours after leaving Bermuda on Jan. 23 the Mercy sighted the American schooner Anna Loretta of Elizabeth, N. J., flying signals of distress. The crew reported that the Captain was dead in his cabin, the mate was dangerously ill, and there was no one to navigate the schooner. The executive officer of the Mercy gave them the course by dead reckoning for Bermuda, and a wireless message was sent to the Navy Yard at Hamilton to send out a tug to tow the schooner in.

Among the wounded officers on board the Mercy was First Lieutenant Benjamin L. Atwater of the 99th Aero Squadron, who was decorated with the D. S. C. by General Pershing for extraordinary heroism on Oct. 5 last. He is suffering from a compound fracture of the right leg. After leaving the Polyclinic Lieutenant Atwater will go to his mother's, Mrs. Ella C. Atwater, of Red Bank, N. J., to recover.

New Yorkers Among Wounded.

Among the wounded New Yorkers on the Mercy was Private Arthur Aikins, Co. A, 61st Infantry, 5th Division, whose home is at 723 East 163d Street, who lost his left foot above the ankle at the Argonne on Nov. 8. He is only 23 years old. He said that the fighting was very hot that morning as his company was advancing over open ground on the Meuse, where there was no cover and the German machine guns were peppering them from a small hill. He fell at 9 o'clock in the morning and laid on the ground without aid until 8 o'clock that night.

Others wounded on board from the vicinity of New York were Lieutenant John F. Redfield, American Air Service, who lives with his mother in Curlock Park, Montclair, N. J.; Private Louis Varetsky, Company B, 109th Machine Gun Battalion, 85 Cannon Street; Private Athanasian Thannbonnari, Company L, 310th Infantry, 262 West Twenty-second Street; Corporal Thomas C. Farley, Company E, 306th Infantry, 521 Seventeenth Street, Brooklyn; Private James Pines, Company B, 315th Infantry, 806 Lee Avenue, Brooklyn; Private Charles Knapp, 357 East 137th Street; Private William J. Cahill, Battery F, 13th Field Artillery, 2,369 Eighth Avenue, and Private Edward Sonnenshine, Battery E, 18th Field Artillery, 116 East 115th Street.

Among the 1,145 officers and men on the British transport Goentoer were four officers and seventy-six men of the 102d Trench Mortar Battery out of the original complement of five officers and 177 men who left Newport News on the 6th of June and went into action on Sept. 26 on the west bank of the Meuse, near Verdun, with the 33d Division, and later crossed to the east bank and fought with the 79th Division. They were under the command yesterday of Captain Charles Pearson, Jr., of Buffalo, N. Y.

The 102d Trench Mortar Battery was composed of men from Troop I of the New York Cavalry and men from up-State cities, and is the first unit of the 27th Division to return home. There were also on board the Goentoer the Headquarters of the 40th Engineers, known as the Camouflage Corps, which was composed of 145 artists whose headquarters were at Dijon, France. They did not go into action, but three of their number were killed—Lieutenant Harry A. Thrasher, a sculptor, and Sergeants Herter and Wolf.

The transport Accomac brought in 27 casuals from various branches of the service, and the General Goethals arrived later in the day with 8 officers and 84 men of the 34th Division and 2 officers and 114 men of Casual Company 11 of New York and 37 casual officers of various branches, making 245 troops all told.

The Chicago of the French Line arrived from Bordeaux with 24 officers and 684 enlisted men, of whom 314 belonged to the 814th Pioneer Infantry (colored) and had been working with the Service of Supplies.

The transport Calamares, which also arrived yesterday after having been fog-bound for twenty-four hours, had 1,414 naval officers and men from the naval base at Pauillac, France, and thirty-six casual army officers and four civilians.

In addition to the troops arriving yesterday there were a number of Red Cross nurses. One of these was Miss Anne F. Hardon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Hardon of 144 East Fortieth Street and Wilton, Conn., who came back on the Chicago after being away for more than two years. After serving in a French military hospital Miss Hardon went to the American Ambulance Hospital and drove a hospital motor wagon for four months. In October last she was sent to the front line emergency hospital in the Verdun sector, where for some time she was the only nurse for 200 wounded.

ORGANIZE FOR WORK OF RECONSTRUCTION

A. I. Elkus Is Elected to Head Committee to Plan for the State's Activities.

SMITH OUTLINES PLANS

Governor, in Address at City Hall Meeting, Tells of New York's Pressing Problems.

Governor Alfred E. Smith addressed his recently appointed Reconstruction Committee last night at its organization meeting in the Aldermanic Chamber of the City Hall, outlining to the members the conditions for which it will be their duty to find remedies, and explaining what must be their relation to the State Legislature in order that effective measures may be enacted. He laid especial stress upon the taxation problems which must be solved before any progressive projects can be financed, and upon the primary necessity of promoting the health and morale of the people themselves.

Mayor Hylan read an address of welcome in which he told what the city had done to face the problems of the day, and offered every facility at the city's disposal for the work of the new commission. Abram I. Elkus, who was elected Chairman of the committee, appointed eleven sub-committees, which will begin work immediately. The other officers elected were: Vice Chairman, Gerrit Y. Lansing, Sarah A. Conboy, and Judge William M. K. Olcott; Secretary, Mrs. Henry Moskowitz, and Treasurer, Charles H. Sabin.

In welcoming the commission to New York, Governor Smith told the members that he had from his legislative experience come to the conclusion that when questions of broad public welfare had to be solved the best way of handling them was to appoint a commission, for it was absolutely necessary in order that the Governor and the Legislature might be in an intelligent position to deal with those questions, that they have the assistance of an outside body that has the opportunity to labor and study from the outside.

"If we are to make progress," the Governor said, "it will be necessary to do two things. First, gather the facts and the evidence as to what is required, and second, to work up public sentiment so as to see that these things are done.

Problem of Additional Revenue.

"One of the most important problems that we have to face is that of raising additional revenue, and the report of the Finance Committee of the Senate is not reassuring. For the fiscal year beginning July 1 next, the estimated resources are $57,637,873.86, while the estimated expenditures based upon the calculations of department heads, are $96,602,290.78, or nearly $39,000,000 in excess of the probable income. It is only fair to say, of course, that the estimates of department heads are always in excess of the actual requirements, as they try to get all they can, but on the other hand, the proposed expenditures do not include any new projects.

"For instance, the State of New Jersey proposes that we join with her in building a tunnel under the Hudson River. We shall not have the money. We have not considered one cent for the construction of new hospitals for the insane, and I want to say that if the actual conditions of those hospitals were known by any considerable number of people we should have strong reason to be ashamed. The overcrowding is disgraceful, and something must be done about it. Before we can give a single dollar to it we must secure new revenue.

"Real estate cannot be burdened with any further taxes. When the new subway was planned, the assessment valuations were raised to 100 per cent. We know why that was done, and we shall have to let it pass. But the fact is that real estate is carrying all it can stand. As it is there are $13,341,673 for our debt service that will have to be met by a direct tax on real estate."

After mentioning the problems of military training and unemployment, Governor Smith laid stress upon the necessity of conserving and promoting the public health. "This question," he said, "should be given long and serious thought. The experience of the draft has demonstrated the necessity of immediate attention to it. Not much good can come to the State if great care is bestowed upon its material assets, its buildings, and its broad fields, unless back of it are the character and forcefulness of its people.

After wishing the members of the committee every success in their undertaking and offering them every help within his power, Governor Smith appointed Henry Evans, Alfred J. Johnson, and William M. K. Olcott a committee to nominate the officers of the Reconstruction Committee. When they presented their nominations, the names were approved unanimously.

Mr. Elkus then assumed charge of the meeting and outlined the activities to be followed by the committee, following this with an announcement of the personnel of the following sub-committee, the appointments not to be considered fixed but subject to the wishes of the members themselves:

Mr. Elkus announced that the city had given the committee offices in the Hall of Records, and had donated furniture for its use, so that, with the appropriation which the Legislature will probably make for running expenses, the committee will be ready to open its offices on Monday morning. The first meeting of the committee will be held this morning at 10:30 o'clock in the committee room adjoining the Aldermanic Chamber, when Professor Howard S. Chanler of Columbia University will make an address on taxation. Upon adjournment the committee will be the guests of the Chairman at a luncheon at the Bankers' Club. Dr. George W. Kirchwey, New York State Director of the Federal Employment Service, will make an address on the subject of unemployment.

PEMBROKE JONES, FINANCIER, DIES

Shipbuilder and New York Social Leader Succumbs After an Operation at 60 Years.

AN UPBUILDER OF SOUTH

Ex-Member of War Trade Board to be Buried in Wilmington, Where He Owned Magnificent Estate.

Mr. Jones was born in Wilmington, N. C., Dec. 15, 1858, the son of Captain John Pembroke Jones and Jane London Jones. He spent a portion of each year on his estate, eight miles from Wilmington. FINANCIAL MARKETS

Money Expectations Send Stocks Up—Loan Restrictions Removed.

The stock market was under the influence throughout the greater part of yesterday's session of anticipatory feelings over the Money Committee's action in respect to bank credits. The Street was filled with rumors about the action to come late in the day, ranging all the way from stories that a 20 per cent. increase would be allowed in brokerage house loans to others that all restrictions would be removed. The committee's decision went as far as the most hopeful follower of the market had looked for, at least in respect to the removal of formal restraints. It remains to be seen, of course, whether it was only the condition of credits which had kept the business in a quiet state for many weeks, but the brisk rise which occurred yesterday showed that speculators were willing to vent some of their enthusiasm over the prospect. Railroad and industrial stocks moved forward together and while the turnover was not large in comparison with really active days of bull markets, still it reflected a considerable increase over many recent sessions. Prices led off from 1 to nearly 3 points higher among many popular stocks with sharp bulges recorded here and there by specialties. Bonds reflected the pending credit changes only to a small degree.

The statement issued by the Money Committee after the close of business showed that the Stock Exchange authorities had carefully scrutinized speculative transactions and were convinced that no signs were in evidence of an outbreak of market activity great enough to disturb the credit structure before the Spring loan of the Government was floated. Having recourse to the records of Stock Exchange houses they presumably were able to trace the quality of buying for some months past. The situation of industry and trade would seem to support the theory that a widespread buying movement was hardly imminent, although it must be borne in mind that security prices usually forecast coming developments in industry and finance a long time in advance. Among the banks, it was learned, the attitude prevailed that credit demands for commercial purposes, although less than during the war period, promised to be great enough to absorb a large amount of bank credit in the period before the new loan appeared, and to preclude any greatly increased allowance for the stock market. Should speculation for the rise gain force, however, it stands to reason that competition for credit between the stock market and commercial demands might grow intensive enough to cause call money rates to rise to a level where the banks would find it profitable to expand their brokerage loans at the same time that commercial borrowing was held in check. From one point of view the removal of credit limitations will be in the nature of an experiment for some time to come. Neither the Treasury Department nor the banks are desirous of having any undue burden put on credits before the Victory Loan campaign begins. At the same time a feeling prevails that a free stock market, if accompanied by advancing prices, would make the public more favorably inclined toward investments in the big loan and thereby aid in its wide distribution.

The compilation of railroad earnings for 1918 as presented to financial circles in yesterday morning's newspapers bore out the prediction made before the end of last year that a deficit of close to $250,000,000 would be the final result. The wage increases, totaling $636,000,000 for a part of the year, showed that the expansion of wage costs for a full year at the same rate would have been close to $800,000,000. The Director General, with opportunity to revise earlier estimates since the end of December, is expected in some quarters to apply for an addition of more than $500,000,000 to the revolving fund for 1919. It is becoming more apparent as figures appear that net earnings this year will have a vital relation to the increase or decrease of traffic as compared with last year.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Baltimore & Ohio Dividend Dates.

The Stock Exchange issued this explanation of the reason for Baltimore & Ohio common stock selling "ex-dividend" yesterday instead of the record date, Jan. 28: "The stock of record date is not Jan. 28, but was Dec. 28. Since Dec. 28 the stock has carried a due bill and has not been ex-dividend, owing to the fact that the dividend was declared payable subject to the approval of the Railroad Administration. The approval having been received, the stock is made ex-dividend today. The dividend is payable Feb. 1. Baltimore & Ohio common will again sell ex-dividend on Tuesday, Jan. 28, which dividend will be payable March 1."

Union Bag and Paper Extra Payment.

The rising tendency of stock prices supplied a fertile field in which extra dividends could flower into profits. The Union Bag and Paper Company's extra disbursement of 2 per cent. was announced and forthwith the stock moved forward 3 points. The dividend will be paid in Fourth Liberty Loan bonds on Feb. 15 to stockholders of record Feb. 5.

Lake Copper Operations Slowing Down.

Dispatches from the Lake Superior copper region yesterday indicated that operations were rapidly approaching a basis promoted by the current slack market. The Quincy Mining Company announced a reduction of 25 per cent. in mine and smelter, and other concerns were reported to be discussing with their men the proposal either to lay off many workers or reduce wages.

The Outlook for Shipbuilding.

One of the noteworthy features of the remarks of President Eugene G. Grace of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, following a meeting of the directors on Thursday, had to do with the plans of the company as regards shipbuilding for foreign countries. He stated that the corporation already had representatives in many of the countries abroad looking into the shipping situation, and this has been taken to indicate that the company will seek foreign orders for its shipbuilding plants. Lack of ships is being felt everywhere, for all of the countries are planning an extension of their foreign interests in trade channels. Just at present trade of this sort is waiting for the carrying vessels.

Awaiting Steel Dividend.

Much interest attaches to the forthcoming meeting of the Directors of the United States Steel Corporation. The tone of the general market list was apparently improved yesterday by the announcement that there would be no cut in the dividend rate on the Bethlehem Steel common stocks. One had been predicted by the speculative element in the Street, and if the United States Steel Corporation also decides to maintain its dividend rate at the level of the last declaration it will be looked upon as not only a favorable omen for the steel shares themselves, but also for underlying business conditions. Just at present the talk is that the Steel Corporation will reduce its extra dividend.

New Steel Contract Abandoned.

Much attention in the steel trade has been directed toward the new contract form which, it was said, would hold the buyer to equal liability with the seller of steel products in case of a cancellation of contract. Under the old contract form, the buyer looked upon his contract more in the nature of an option than as a binding agreement. This new device was hailed as a step which would be to the benefit of the steel companies. It was, therefore, surprising when the announcement came forth yesterday after a meeting of the Directors of the American Iron and Steel Institute that the Special Committee which had been considering this matter for several years had been disbanded and that no recommendation had been made for the adoption of the new contract form. No reason for the rejection of the proposed change was advanced.

Canadian Carriers Do Well.

Reports from Canada indicate that the railroads of the Dominion had a profitable year in 1918. Preliminary figures show that the gross income for the combined railroad properties increased more than 9 per cent. in 1918, while the combined increase in December amounted to 32 per cent.

Discount Companies Abroad.

With New York's first discount corporation just launched considerable interest attaches to the earnings of some of the British companies after which a number of American concerns have been patterned. The companies abroad all showed good earnings in the year just ended. In the case of the National Discount Company in England the dividend for the year was raised to 11½ per cent. from 11 per cent. in 1917. In 1918 the concern added £50,000, while £47,200 was carried to the surplus account. The Directors of Alexander's Discount Company declared a 12 per cent. dividend and a bonus of a shilling a share, which was free of income tax. The Union Discount Company of London carried forward £121,000 at the end of 1918 and paid a 14 per cent. dividend in the course of the year. The dividend rate was the same in 1917, and £116,548 was the company's undivided balance at the close of that year.

Dividend Ruling Affects Stocks.

A number of the stock issues were affected in the market yesterday by the ruling of the Federal Court in this district on the question of stock dividends not being income. Among them were Goodrich Rubber, United Cigar Stores, Industrial Alcohol, and Kelly-Springfield. All of these issues gained ground on rumors of approaching stock dividends.

Reorganize Mines Company.

The Mines Company of America has completed plans for raising working capital with which to resume operations in Mexico. The company has arranged to sell its assets to the Dolores Esperanza Corporation, the latter company to have outstanding 864,802 shares of stock, the same number as the Mines Company of America. Stockholders in the old company are entitled to subscribe for shares of the new company upon depositing an equal number of shares of the old concern together with $2 for each share so deposited. The reorganization plan has been underwritten by Hayden, Stone & Co. and they will take such shares of the new corporation as are not subscribed for by stockholders in the old company.

NEAR A DEADLOCK ON REVENUE BILL

Senate and House Conference Reaches Crisis, and Each Side Delivers an Ultimatum.

PROFITS TAX CHIEF ISSUE

Senators Believed to Have Yielded Some Ground on This Point in Hope of Compromise.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—A crisis was reached today in the deliberations of the Senate and House conferees on the War Revenue bill, each side in the controversy prepared an ultimatum and they failed to reach a definite agreement on important features, such as the proposed substitution of an inheritance tax by the Senate for the House estate tax and the rate of war and excess profits taxes.

The discussions on the bill have now reached a point, at least, where the conferees are fully aware of the convictions of Senate and House members on vital issues. All of the titles of the bill have been reviewed and the lines of cleavage sharply drawn. There are those who believe that, confronted by this situation, the conferees, after sleeping over their grievances for a night or two, will come to a quick decision. In this instance these watchers hold the storm may precede the calm. That optimistic view, however, is not held by many.

The conferees met in joint session for a short time during the morning and then split into opposing camps, the Senate conferees continuing their deliberations in the Senate Finance Committee room and the House conferees retiring to the Ways and Means Committee room of the House. At these individual meetings the ultimatums in regard to important features of the bill were drawn up.

Leaders Confer Secretly.

Soon after 3 o'clock Representative Kitchin and Representative Rainey called upon the Senate conferees, and questions of apparent gravity were under discussion, for some of the financial experts not members of the joint committee, and even the Secretary, were requested to retire. So far as the press is concerned, attendance at all of the sessions, joint or otherwise, is forbidden.

But it appears that an amicable agreement was not reached at this ultrasecret session. The exact nature of the split was not made known. One report was to the effect that the House conferees as represented by Mr. Kitchin had offered suggestions in regard to a compromise on the war excess profits taxes, which might have proved acceptable to the Senate conferees with a few alterations if the House conferees had been willing to agree to the substitution of the Senate's inheritance tax title for the estate tax title written into the original House draft of the bill. It is understood that Mr. Kitchin could not bring himself to such a solution of the difficulties, at least without further consultation with his co-workers.

The most hopeful sign during the last three days, indicating that some sort of compromise would be reached, was found in the fact that the financial expert of the conferees had been holding extended consultations with Representative Kitchin and submitting to him the paragraphs of a rewritten title dealing with war excess profits taxes to which, it was said, the Senate conferees were willing to agree. It was further reported that this rewritten title dealt some of the provisions suggested in the original Senate amendments to the House bill, to which Mr. Kitchin and others holding his convictions had protested. In fact, report had it, that the rewritten title would provide a compromise which would more nearly approach the demands made in the original House bill for an 80 per cent. tax on corporations than the provisions in the amendments suggested by the Senate, which lightened the proposed tax payable in 1919 by a very considerable percentage.

It became apparent today that business men throughout the nation were beginning to show a lively interest in the reports which have gone out from Washington concerning the developments in the conference. Reports were going about also, it was said, that a situation was being fostered which might result in the defeat of all efforts at a general agreement and action by the legislative end of the Government, which would bring about a continuation of the present revenue law with amendments only as they affected the war and excess profits taxes.

But nothing of a definite nature could be obtained here which seemed to justify such a conclusion, at least not at this time. It is certain that another determined effort will be made within the next few days to effect compromises, especially in view of the sentiments expressed by Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, in appealing for speedy action, so that the machinery of the Treasury Department might be put in motion.

Hearing from Constituents.

Members of Congress are beginning to hear from constituents who are anxious to know just where they stand and how their business interests will be affected by the war revenue legislation. The present situation, they are being told, is leaving an unsettled condition.

No definite official announcement has come from the conferees that anything approximating the rates of taxation on war excess profits proposed by the House has been agreed to even tentatively by the Senate conferees, who sought in their amendments to hammer them down by a very considerable margin. All information in connection with the war and excess profits tax payable in 1919 has been of an unofficial nature.

In connection with the inheritance tax which the Senate conferees want substituted for the estate tax proposed by the House, the following points are made.

Under the estate tax plan the progressive rates of from 3 to 40 per cent are graded in accordance with the size of the net estate as a whole, without regard to the amount of the shares of the individual legatees or heirs. According to this method, which the Senate holds to be inequitable, a beneficiary receiving a legacy of any given sum, say $100,000, from an estate of $1,000,000,000 may have that share diminished by a much greater amount of tax than a beneficiary who receives the same sum from a smaller estate.

The method of taxation employed by practically all of the States, the Senate conferees hold, is that of an inheritance tax in which the rate is based upon the size of the individual share. It was the opinion of the Senate committee that the inheritance tax plan was fairer in its operation than the estate tax plan. The Senate conferees also reduced the progressive rates from 1 to 25 per cent.

OHIO COURT BLOCKS NEW PHONE RATES

Columbus Judge Assails Attempt by Burleson to Override State Rights and Laws.

ACTION IN MASSACHUSETTS

Service Board Begins Injunction Proceedings—Vermont Legislators Adopt a Resolution of Protest.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 24.—A temporary restraining order against the Ohio State Telephone Company prohibiting the collection of long-distance tolls established by Postmaster General Burleson was granted in the County Court today by Judge E. B. Kinkead, who denounced the action of the Postmaster General as a "ruthless attempt to override State rights."

Judge Kinkead said:

"The act of Congress does not authorize the Government custodian for war purposes to ruthlessly attempt to override State rights, State laws, and State officials to whom are committed the powers and duties relating to such matters by our own laws and statutes. A temporary restraining order may be allowed, and, so far as this court is concerned, the decree may be made permanent without further hearing."

BOSTON, Jan. 24.—The Public Service Commission asked the Supreme Court today to enjoin the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company from continuing in force the revised schedule of telephone toll rates instituted by Postmaster General Burleson until the reasonableness of the new rates could be determined by the commission. Assistant Attorney General Hitchcock represented the commission. The court issued an order requiring the company to appear on Tuesday next to show cause why it should not be enjoined.

The Public Service Commission, after a hearing on Jan. 17, at which protests against the new rates were made, ordered the telephone company not to put them into effect until the hearing of the commission had been concluded on Feb. 10.

MONTPELIER, Vt., Jan. 24.—The House of Representatives today adopted a resolution protesting against the "usurpation of Vermont's rights" in the continued Federal control of railroads, telegraphs, and telephone systems. The resolution went to the Senate for action.

United States Senator W. P. Dillingham had previously addressed the Legislature on national questions, in connection with which he opposed any extension of Federal control of public utilities.

WANT CREDITS RELEASED.

Bankers Urge Passage of Bill for Relief of War Contractors.

The Administrative Committee of the American Bankers' Association has passed a resolution urging upon the Senate the early passage of the Chamberlain bill providing for the relief of contractors engaged in war work. The association was moved to action, according to a statement yesterday, on the ground that bank credit was so tied up in contracts taken to assist the Government that the normal business of the country was being retarded thereby. The resolution, signed by Robert F. Maddox, President, said:

Resolved, That the American Bankers Association earnestly urges the passage by the Senate of H. R. 13,274, as reported by Mr. Chamberlain on Jan. 20, with an amendment subject, however, to the important modification that wherever the right of appeal therein is given to the Department of Justice, such right be eliminated.

A provision of this nature places upon the Department of Justice a duty to investigate all contracts or orders now pending validation, adjustment, and final settlement, and will cause a serious and unnecessary delay, to the great detriment of business and will cause great financial loss to customers of banks and seriously interfere with the employment of labor.

We believe that there are adequate laws existing to protect the Government in the payment on contracts when validated and that section 2 of the bill in question protects the Government in the validation of informal contracts and the completion of contracts to replace informal orders and agreements.

The association asserts that many corporations have necessary working capital engaged in contracts which must be released before they can go ahead on commercial work.

NEW DECLINE IN COTTON.

South Sells Freely, with Local Traders Joining the Movement.

As was to be expected after Thursday's bad break, yesterday's cotton market started very irregular and displayed signs of extreme nervousness. Near months especially felt the strain and after a none too good opening, continued the decline until prices stood at levels 30 to 55 points under the previous night's closing. The new crop months did somewhat better, but even they acted in an uncertain manner and showed nothing to encourage the bulls during the forenoon. The South sold freely, as usual, and some of the local traders joined in the selling movement. Liverpool was more or less of a negative quantity.

Reports that Japanese interests have been selling heavily recently are not taken as seriously as the authors of the reports might desire. In conservative circles, it is believed these reports are considerably exaggerated and little importance is attached to them. There is heavy selling for other foreign accounts, however, and from time to time there probably is a certain amount of speculation against actual holdings.

In the forenoon dealings yesterday there was some good buying; good in the sense that it came at a time when the bears were about exhausted and not able to offer any sustained resistance. The result was a general strengthening of the whole list, and at the close prices were unchanged to 60 points above the previous night's closing figures.

Less was heard of labor troubles yesterday, the report from Lawrence, Mass., that there will be no strike among textile workers for the present being the most encouraging to be received in some days.

STEEL PLANT SHUTS DOWN.

Nova Scotia Company, with Bookings Low, Closes for Repairs.

The Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company has temporarily closed down its plants and mines. This is one of the important Canadian corporations engaged in the steel business, and considerable local interest was aroused by the cessation of operations, which became known yesterday through dispatches sent by D. H. McDougall, President, to Directors here.

"It is well known that the several plants of the company," said Mr. McDougall, "have, during the last four years, been operated at high pressure. The present moment, when the cancellation of munition contracts has left the tonnage on the company's order books at a lower point than at any time during the last four years, is considered an excellent opportunity for carrying out necessary repairs and renewals which could not have been done during the strenuous years when all efforts were being bent on increased production without consideration of cost. New business is offered to a very limited extent and at prices which are not at present attractive to the Nova Scotia Company."

The company is working on plans for additional development, said Mr. McDougall. Net current assets, he stated, were $10,000,000 and more, which indicated ample working capital. The corporation raised $5,000,000 new funds in 1917 through a sale of stock, which was handled in part by Hayden, Stone & Co., who represent the American interests in the Canadian concern.

ROCK ISLAND GETS OUTLET.

Settlement of Old Suit Gives Road Egress to the Gulf.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company announced yesterday that a settlement of the litigation between the company and the Colorado & Southern Railway Company, which grew out of contracts entered into in 1906 and 1914, involving the purchase of a half interest in the Trinity & Brazos Valley Railway, had been effected, the Rock Island to pay some $4,000,000 and secure the interest in the property contracted for. The statement explaining the settlement says:

A settlement has been agreed upon whereby the Colorado & Southern will accept in cash 60 per cent. of the amount due on the contract, which under the final decree in the Rock Island receivership would be payable in full in 6 per cent. preferred stock at par, such as was paid to all other general creditors of the Rock Island. This will involve the payment of some $4,000,000, and the Rock Island will own outright a half interest in the Trinity & Brazos Valley Railway and will have a permanent outlet to the Gulf ports, which will be of great value in the event of the return of the roads to private operation. The total cost of the Trinity & Brazos Valley road is now in excess of $11,000,000.

In 1915 the receiver for the Rock Island disaffirmed the contracts and the Colorado & Southern brought suit for their enforcement.

SAY CENSORS HURT TRADE.

Merchants' Association Asks That Use of Code Be Restored.

The Merchants' Association, in a public statement made yesterday, complained that notwithstanding the fact that the war was over, censorship restrictions are still hampering business. The association has sent a letter to the chief cable censor of the Navy Department which contains quotations from a letter from an "important business firm with regard to the cable situation in connection with the South African service."

The letter says the delay in cable service is putting importers in this country for South African commodities to enormous expense, through misinterpretation occasioned by delays and in the loss of benefits of markets. It was said that in normal times cables could be exchanged with Cape Town in forty-eight hours, but that for the last two and a half months the time has frequently been as long as fifteen days. The letter quoted by the association also says:

"As a concrete example of the result of these hardships, we can tell you that our plant at Gloversville, N. Y., employing over 300 men, will be shut down and these men thrown out of employment and the productivity of the plant lost to the country for an indefinite time."

The association urges the adoption of a former suggestion that the authorities in charge of the censoring of cables seriously consider the possibility of immediately allowing a much more general use of codes.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Prices were strong in an active market yesterday on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. Final quotations were about the highest for the session and represented net gains from one to three points in the active issues, with several stocks showing even greater advances. Securities were in active demand during the greater part of the session. Occasional reactions represented but limited profit taking or the activities of professional operators, but had only a temporary effect on prices.

THE CONDITION OF TRADE.

Reports of commercial agencies this week indicate that the peace-time expansion of trade continues to wait on prices. Considerable progress in readjusting quotations for goods to new conditions has been made, but the indications seem to be that the movement will go further before a satisfactory awakening of buying occurs.

Dun's Review says:

For nine weeks running, recessions have outnumbered advances in a representative list of wholesale quotations, and in retail channels, where accumulations of merchandise have resulted partly from unseasonable temperature over a wide area, some offerings are being made at material concessions. But while certain markets have been lately turning downward, and though efforts to stimulate demand are increasing, the price reaction apparently has not yet gone far enough to promote the anticipated business revival, and the prevailing situation, in the broader sense, remains one of diminishing consumption and production. This condition finds plain reflection in the decided halting of industrial activities, especially in the leading Eastern centres, and current reports of idle machinery and growing unemployment contrast sharply with the recent great manufacturing pressure and universal complaint of labor scarcity.

Bank clearings this week at the principal cities in the United States amount to $6,348,503,048, an increase of 19.4 per cent. over this week last year. The gain at New York this week is 12.3 per cent. and outside cities 33.4 per cent.

Bradstreet's says, after commenting on the dullness of business in various lines:

The trade situation, however, though slack, is not without redeeming features, and there is enough sunlight to prevent an unrelievedly gloomy picture being painted. Perhaps the most encouraging feature from the standpoint of the long-suffering consumer is the continuance of the declining tendency shown in food prices noted in these columns last week. While this tendency is most manifest in butter, cheese, and eggs—dairy products, in short—and mild weather and cancellations of our own and allied Government orders may be chief reasons therefor, there is little disposition to question the cause in view of the agreeable effect.

The Conservatives of the province, for the first time on record, cast their votes with the Government on the tariff issue.

THORNE URGES CURB IN RAILROAD LAW

Shippers' Representative Asks Power for Courts and State Commissions.

WANTS CHECK ON RATES

Tells Senate Committee That Shippers Are Strongly Against Federal Management.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The assertion that Government operation of railroads is so distasteful to the shippers of this country that if they had an opportunity to vote upon it the Federal plan would be overwhelmingly rejected, was made today by Clifford Thorne, who represents various shippers, to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

"If the members of Mr. McAdoo's staff," said Mr. Thorne, "had deliberately planned to double-cross the Director General, and thereby to make Government operation so unpopular that it would tend to kill any possible movement toward Government ownership, they could not have adopted any more effective methods than those which actually have been adopted.

"I do not think for an instant that these railway officials have attempted to double-cross Mr. McAdoo, for they are honorable men. Unquestionably the emergency demands of the war were largely responsible for the existing situation.

"There are some good things which Mr. McAdoo and his associates have accomplished, that must be saved out of the wreckage. To do this intelligently and efficiently will require several months of discussion, and the careful drafting of laws that will make some very important changes in our present statutes. During this interval the shipper wants protection against a business organization having powers that are autocratic and despotic in character."

Mr. Thorne said that it was of "paramount importance" that the full powers of the courts and of the State Commissions should be restored at once and that this could be done by simply striking out a few lines and inserting one or two sentences in the present railroad control law.

"We are gravely apprehensive as to whether we can command your attention to this subject sufficiently to get immediate action, but unless this is taken the shippers of the country will suffer incalculable injury," he said. "We may differ on many things, such as the relative functions of the State and Federal Governments, the pooling of earnings, mergers, and consolidations which may tend to eliminate competition in service, the control of capitalization by the Federal Government or by the State, but I believe I am safe in saying that the vast majority of the shippers of the United States are united in urgently petitioning for immediate action on the proposition which I have stated.

"We believe that all other discussion might well be temporarily suspended for a few days so as to make possible the immediate consideration of this issue. Unless you decide to do this nothing will be accomplished by the present Congress.

"The transportation problem forced upon us at this time will inevitably become one of the leading issues, if not the greatest, before the American people during the coming twelve months."

Mr. Thorne asserted that the Director General of Railroads "has decided, and is now proposing to decide, controverted issues between the shippers and the railroads involving millions of dollars without any semblance of a hearing before a disinterested body. He is now considering wholesale disturbances of rate relationships upon which business has been built up and established during the last generation without any hearing before a disinterested tribunal before the new rates become effective."

These things, said Mr. Thorne, created uncertainty and confusion among the shippers of the country. He asked the Senate Committee to restore the suspension powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to strike out the clause which attempts to make the acts of the President superior to State and Federal law and the common," and to insert a clause requiring the Director General to pay final judgments against common carriers under his control and charge them to operating expenses.

Mr. Thorne will resume the stand on Monday.

FOUND IN PRISON CAMP.

Soldier Reported Killed Is Traced by Y. M. C. A. Representative.

Given up as dead, and his Government insurance paid to his family, William E. Lynch of 468 Second Avenue has been found by the Y. M. C. A.'s system of checking up gifts sent to our soldiers in German prison camps. Through this system it was not only established that Lynch was living, but his recent whereabouts—the prison camp at Rastatt—with positive identification, was furnished to his mother and brothers.

Lynch is a member of Company I, 308th Regiment. On the date on which he was captured, as proved later by the "Y" records, the War Department listed him as killed in action. This report came in due time to the family. The Government made its investigation and paid the insurance claim.

Meanwhile Conrad Hoffman, the Y. M. C. A.'s American representative in the German prison camps, visited Rastatt, where most of the American prisoners were held. About seventy-five men asked him to send word of their safety to their families. One of these boys was Lynch. Hoffman communicated with the New York Headquarters, and the Lynch family was notified.

Early the next morning one of Lynch's brothers rushed into the Y. M. C. A. Headquarters with the "Y" letter in his hand. Initials, military unit, date of capture, and even mother's name, all in the "Y" records, proved beyond doubt that Lynch was safe. Later a receipt, dated Nov. 2, arrived from Lynch at Rastatt, acknowledging "two books, for which I thank you very much." Other former prisoners from whom the Y. M. C. A. has received cards acknowledging gifts forwarded to them in Germany are:

Luca Centiempo, 2,727 West Fifteenth Street, Coney Island, dated Rastatt, Oct. 29; G. S. Brown, 93 Wright Street, Stapleton, S. I., Rastatt, Nov. 4; Harry Maratos, 30 Madison Street, Manhattan, Rastatt, Nov. 4; Allen Oshinsky, 133 West 113th Street, Manhattan, Rastatt, Nov. 2; H. Shipatchek, 7 Allen Street, Manhattan, Remchin, Nov. 7; Daniel Marley, 256 Lewis Avenue, Brooklyn, Rastatt, Nov. 2, and E. Sakowicz, 305 Avenue A, Manhattan, Remchin, Nov. 7.

Disclosures Follow Mason's Attempt to Reclaim Package.

When Henry Mason was told on Tuesday to leave the home of his parents, at 541 East 152d Street, he gathered together $5,000 and on his way downtown checked the package of money at the subway news stand at 149th Street and Third Avenue. The clerk, William Ward, not knowing the value of the package, tossed it under a shelf.

Mason went back for his package yesterday. He said he had lost the check for the package, but that it was important that he get it back, as it contained money. The clerk sent him to the office of Ward & Gow to make his claim. Mason explained there that the package contained money and that he had lost the check. The management communicated with the Morrisania police station and a detective was sent to the subway station to be present when Mason got the package. When the transfer had been made he took the young man to the police station there to explain how he had $5,000, mostly in one dollar bills.

After Mason had told what the police considered to be conflicting stories they sent for his father, John F. Mason, a hardware manufacturer. The result of the conference that followed was that the father charged his son with grand larceny. The police said that young Mason told his father that for five years he had been failing to turn in a part of the money collected on orders and instead had been concealing it in small packages about the house. After his disagreement with his father and the latter told him to leave he had packed up the money with the intention of buying a farm with it.

Mason justified his action by saying that he had worked for his father without pay and he thought it no more than right that he should have taken his wages out of money that he should have turned in.

yard sheetings were sold at 9¼ cents. There was an absence of dealing in other constructions.

Buying Coral Necklaces.

In the retail jewelry trade there is a brisk demand for white and pink coral necklaces that retail from $5 to $15 apiece. These articles are very popular with the Palm Beach trade. Reports from various sections of the country are to the effect that jewelry is selling much better this season, especially sterling silver veil pins, the demand for which seems to be almost unlimited.

Silk Shirts Selling.

As it seems to the shirt trade, silk shirts are selling equally well and in some instances better than those of heavy material. This opinion has also been voiced by buyers. Although the price of these goods is high, and with prospects of being even higher, many orders are being received. One of the local concerns made three shipments yesterday that represented a total of 1,250 dozen at $84 a dozen.

Demand for Middy Blouses.

There is a big demand for middy blouses in the local and out-of-town trade. In fact, the sale of this merchandise has been so large during the last six months that the stocks at present are very low. In the West and Middle West the buying has been very heavy. In one instance an order was received from the jobbing trade that amounted to nearly $18,000, and reorders are now coming in for May delivery. Voiles with hand smocking, linens, and Japanese crêpe are among the best sellers this season.

Trade in Children's Dresses.

With the opening of the Spring buying season the sale of children's dresses has so far been very satifactory. The orders that are now being taken are not as large as those received last year, but the volume of business is just as big. This season buyers are placing smaller orders and are buying more often. One firm said that the retailers carry just enough merchandise to last for about thirty days, and then replenish the stock. Styles are a very important factor in the new lines, and if a garment lacks this it is not very likely to prove successful.

Sale of Silk Hosiery.

The sale of silk hosiery has increased to the point where the demand is greatly in excess of the supply. This is partly due to the lack of machines, and the shortage of skilled knitters. One of the large manufacturers of these goods said yesterday that, on orders taken several months ago, they are only able to ship about half of the amount originally called for. In view of these conditions very few advance orders are being taken. Hand embroidered and lace effects are being sold very extensively for both street and evening wear.

Play Garments for Children.

Play garments for children that have considerable merit and are also very practical have made their appearance and have met with much favor from visiting buyers of infants' and children's wear, who have placed many good-sized orders. One of the styles shown is an apron cut from printed goods showing pictures of nursery rhymes and is tastefully trimmed in bright colors. Original and novel styles are also shown in rompers, creepers, and overalls trimmed with the same attractive materials. A pretty beach set consists of apron, bonnet, and bag.

Putting It Up to the Farmer.

Housewives are asking why they have to pay over a dollar for their brooms when they used to get them for 50 and 75 cents. A wholesaler says the increase in price can be put up to the farmer this time. Most of the broom corn comes from Kansas and Illinois and, with labor conditions and what not, the farmer out there who raises it says that he must get $500 a ton for it where before war days he felt well paid at $80. This has put up the retail price of brooms from 75 cents for the best quality to $1.50 and even $2, and the wholesale dealer says the housewife cannot afford to get anything but the best. Vacuum cleaners and other patent appliances are said to affect the broom trade but little. A broom is always a handy accessory.

Few Calls for Woolen Gloves.

Owing to the present weather conditions the sale of woolen glooves is practically at a standstill. The retail stores appear to have plenty of stock on hand, and very few orders are being placed for Fall delivery. It was said yesterday that gloves costing $2.70 a dozen were sold to the retailers for $4.25 during the end of last year. Since then there has been a reduction of 30 per cent. on some of the lines, but even this has not proved much of an inducement to buyers.

Patriotic Hatbands.

Small girls, who have never seen the ocean and whose brothers did not serve Uncle Sam on the sea, may still wear a hatband with the name of a warship upon it and feel that they "belong," for they can take one named for their own State. The hat men have brought out pretty, simple straw hats, in white, blue, black, &c., in high sailor and mushroom shapes, the only trimming being a warship hat band. These come in red, in white, and in black, and the name of the ship is in gold letters. There are Wyoming, Utah, and other inland States in the list, and for the little girls whom the States do not fit there is one band with the name of the Father of His Country that will suit any one. The hats are made to retail for about $5.

Gray Goods Prices Lower.

Even price concessions did not induce large buying in the local gray goods market yesterday. The sales reported were from both first and second hands and were for deliveries this month and next. Of print cloths, 30-inch 68-72s were disposed of at 11½ cents, and 38½-inch 60-48s and 64-60s at 8¾ and 9¾ cents respectively. Thirty-six inch 5.50

HEARING IN HARBOR STRIKE.

Lighter Manager Tells How Captains Pile Up Wages.

At yesterday's hearing at the City Hall before the sub-committee of the National War Labor Board in the controversy between the harbor boat owners and their employes, one of the witnesses was Richard F. Morton, manager of the Atlantic Lighterage Corporation. He said his company operated 100 lighters, and that it chartered thirty lighters from owners who are Captains on their own boats. Some of their lighter Captains, Mr. Morton said, make large sums outside of their regular wages. One Captain in the week ending Oct. 16, 1918, he said, made his $21 wages as Captain, $14 for watching and $18.60 in doing stevedore work, making a total of $53.60. The Captain is paid extra for watching on the boat at night, is not called upon to do any work and has a place to sleep.

Frederick L. Polock, Superintendent of the West Shore ferries, was called as a witness by Theodore L. Burgess, counsel for the Railroad Administration. He said the men of the West Shore ferries preferred a long and short swing, equaling sixteen hours in two days, to a straight eight hours on and sixteen hours off. He said they liked it because it gave them a chance to get all their meals at home and gave them better hours on their time off.

Similar testimony was given by Captain J. M. Emery, Marine Superintendent of the Lackawanna Railroad, who said his company operated more ferry boats than any other company in the harbor. He told the duties of the different workers on the ferryboats.

The witness said that the Lackawanna Railroad owned 110 grain boats and chartered a like number. These boats, he said, were under tow about 10 per cent. of the time. The witness said it would be impracticable to relieve the men on the grain boats should an eight-hour day be put in operation on them, as it was never known for certain where a boat would be at a specific hour. Captain Emery said most of the Captains on the grain boats had their families with them, and he thought they would not like a system which would require their being relieved.

VICTORY FOR NEWSDEALER.

He Gets Temporary Injunction in Hearst Newspaper Fight.

Supreme Court Justice Cropsey in Brooklyn yesterday granted a temporary injunction to John Williamson, a newsdealer at Borough Hall, restraining Park Commissioner Harman from revoking his permit because he refused to sell Hearst newspapers on his stand. The injunction will remain in effect pending the trial of a suit brought by Williamson to make it permanent. In his decision Justice Cropsey said:

"The revocation was stated to be based on the refusal of the plaintiff to sell New York Americans and Evening Journals. The plaintiff admits that he refuses to sell those papers. He says that his refusal is based on the fact that he believes that they are un-American in spirit, and also because many of his customers refuse to deal with him if he continues to sell those papers. And he attaches some twenty or more affidavits of customers who state that that is their feeling and attitude. No papers are presented which show that the public are in any way inconvenienced by the refusal of the plaintiff to sell these particular papers. In fact, the moving papers show that the sales of these papers have greatly decreased.

"There is nothing in plaintiff's permit that requires him to sell every paper that is published, nor that the Park Commissioner may require him to sell. He is under no obligation certainly to carry papers to which his customers object and which will interfere with his business. It may be that on the trial the situation will appear differently than it does on the papers submitted. The revocation seems not to have been in the public interest nor for any good reason."

A "Preferred" Introduction to Buyers

AN introduction that "gets you in" to the buyer's office while competing salesmen wait outside. An introduction that brings you into close contact not only with New York buyers, or with those within easy traveling distances, but with the leading buyers in over 5000 towns and cities. Such an introduction is your announcement on the Business Page of The New York Times.

It has the confidence of buyers. It gives them information that they look for daily—tells them where to find special bargains, job lots, surplus stocks or goods that they are urgently in need of. And it reaches them at the moment when the sale is easiest made—when they want the goods you have to offer.

So talk to these buyers through the Business Page. Tell them about the goods you have—the prices—description—deliveries. You can do it with little expense and big returns, if you use

THE BUSINESS PAGE OF The New York Times.

REAL ESTATE FIELD

Lower New York, which has shown exceptional realty activity recently in the financial and insurance districts, furnished another noteworthy transaction yesterday in the sale of the eight-story Montauk office building, occupying the westerly block front on William Street between Liberty Street and Maiden Lane. The structure was purchased by the Broadway-John Street Realty Company, of which Elias A. Cohen is President, being his fifth important operation in that locality within the last few years.

The Montauk Building was purchased from the estate of J. Metcalfe Thomas, the sellers being the heirs, Mrs. Louise Carrol Thomas, wife of the late Mr. Thomas, and T. Gaillard Thomas. The late Mr. Thomas erected the building several years ago. It has a frontage of 79.1 feet on William Street, 44.4 feet on Liberty Street, and 24 feet on Maiden Lane, being 79 to 81 William Street, 62 Maiden Lane, and 19 Liberty Street. It is constructed with foundations capable of supporting four additional stories.

Another interesting feature of the deal is that the property occupies the easterly end of the block of which the greater part has recently been purchased by the Federal Reserve Bank, including an area of 38,500 square feet.

Adolph and Henry Bloch represented the buyer as attorneys.

Frederick Brown Buys Another Bronx Block Front.

Another block front deal in the East Bronx, the second this week, was closed yesterday by Frederick Brown, operator, who purchased from the East 169th Street Corporation four five-story modern apartments, held at $250,000.

The structures occupy the block front on the west side of Prospect Avenue, from 169th to Freeman Street, 88 by 245 by irregular. There are seventy-seven apartments and eight stores, which show a gross rental of about $30,000 a year.

In part payment the buyer gave eight lots on the northwest corner of Cauldwell Avenue and 156th Street, held at $45,000. Max Alexander negotiated the sale. On Wednesday last Mr. Brown resold the Great Northern Apartments, on East 161st Street, held at $500,000, to a syndicate headed by Louis Cohen.

These houses adjoin the nineteen dwellings purchased by Mr. Goldstone from the Sloane estate in 1916.

Education Notes.

The City College, in co-operation with the Board of Education and the Board of Health, is now maintaining five clinics in the various boroughs for the correction of speech defects. These clinics are maintained as public institutions to give free treatment to any one suffering with a speech defect and co-operate with the United States Government in curing soldiers suffering from "shell shock." No money is sought for their support, and the public is warned against any fraudulent appeals. Any one needing advice or treatment should apply to the Director of the New York City Clinics for Speech Defects, Dr. Frederick Martin, Board of Education, 500 Park Avenue, New York.

A special meeting of the High School Teachers' Association will be held in the Washington Irving High School at 11 A. M. today to consider the recommendations of the Federation Salary Committee and to make plans for an energetic campaign to obtain satisfactory legislation. Comparative figures will be presented showing the relation between high and elementary school salaries in other large cities of the United States and a careful analysis made of the schedules adopted by the federation at its last meeting.

The new Manhattan Trade School Building was open for a house warming last evening. The building is regarded as the finest girls' trade school in the world.

Principal Earl P. Haynes and the teachers of the Edward Bush P. S. 18, Brooklyn, gave a luncheon to Edward Burk on Wednesday in honor of his eighty-ninth birthday.

Word was received here yesterday that Justice Rudd in Albany had denied the appeal of the Board of Education of New York City for a restraining order on the State Commissioner of Education to prevent him hearing the case of the Board of Education with regard to money given to it by the State, but used by the Controller to reduce taxation.

ANTI-DRY MEN TELL OF WIDE SUPPORT

Flood of Telegrams and Letters Reported at Headquarters of New Organization Here.

MANY OFFER THEIR AID

Petitions of Protest, Officials Declare, Have Been Received, Bearing 200,000 Signatures.

Officers of the newly-formed Association Opposed to National Prohibition had a busy day yesterday. Hundreds of telegrams from persons living in this State and in New Jersey, Delaware, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts, asking for membership blanks and offering personal and financial support, it was announced, had been received at the association's headquarters in the Cambridge Building, Thirty-third Street and Fifth Avenue.

As a result of the preliminary work done by the association previous to the first general meeting of its members on Thursday afternoon, the secretary of the organization said yesterday that he had received petitions of protest against the methods employed to obtain the ratification of the Federal Prohibition Amendment from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Nevada, Nebraska, California, Oregon, New Mexico, Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Florida, Illinois, Ohio, Minnesota, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Iowa, Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Mexico, Wisconsin, Georgia, West Virginia, Washington, Missouri, and Vermont, the States being named in the order in which they were heard from.

The letters accompanying the petitions, the Secretary said, explained that the signatures to the petitions had been obtained without any difficulty, because the signers believed that liberties hitherto guaranteed by the Constitution were menaced, first, by the manner in which this amendment was passed by Congress, and, second, by the methods which had obtained its ratification.

Up to the time of closing the office of the association at 6 o'clock last evening more than 200,000 signatures to petitions had been received, officials of the organization said. One of the petitions contained the signatures of 200 men employed in an Oregon shipbuilding plant. The letter accompanying this petition closed with this statement: "In times past American labor has sometimes been exploited by American capital, but up to this time both labor and capital have been allowed a reasonable measure of personal liberty. That is why, up to this time, Bolshevism could have made little headway in this country. If American labor and American capital are to be spared the terrors of Bolshevism, every legal effort must be put forth by both to make inoperative the ratification of the prohibition amendment."

Another petition, it was said, was signed by 250 Italian-Americans resident of New York. The letter accompanying this petition said that if the signers could not be permitted to have in their homes and drink the wines which they have always drunk, they would go back to the land of their nativity, which, "although a Kingdom, gives greater personal freedom to its citizens than will be permitted if this amendment stands to Italians by birth resident in this Republic." A woman suffrage leader in Brooklyn asked that she be permitted to sign a petition, because she believed the prohibition amendment was "against the best interests of the country and the cause of woman suffrage."

Boland Tells of Plans.

Frank A. Boland, general counsel for the association, was asked yesterday if any attempt had been made or was contemplated to bring about a reversal of the ratification of the amendment by any of the State Legislatures now in session which voted for ratification.

"Action has already been taken," said Mr. Boland, "to accomplish that very thing in the State of Masaachusetts, and it will be taken in other States. Charles S. Rackemann, one of the leaders of the Massachusetts bar, who has been associated with Moorefield Story, former President of the American Bar Association, and Francis S. Peabody in fighting the ratification of the amendment on the ground of its inherent viciousness and on the ground that it violates every principle of constitutional liberty; caused a resolution to reconsider the ratification vote to be introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature about a month ago. It was referred to the proper committee, and, it is expected, will be reported out for consideration within a short time."

Besides the telegrams and petitions, the Secretary said that the association had received hundreds of letters offering support and asking for enrollment. One of these was from the general counsel for the State of New York of one of the chief railroads of the country, in which the writer said: "If there is any way in which the writer can be of assistance to you in connection with your movement against national prohibition, please command me. I do not know whether you propose to employ volunteer assistance on your Law Committee or not. If you do, all of my time that you may require is at your disposal. In the meantime, the association may call upon me for any financial or other assistance that I am in a position to give."

Another letter, dated from Baltimore, made public by the association, said: "Thank heaven, even this late day, an organization has been started to try to regain mankind's rights. I'll join cheerfully. Your association will have thousands upon thousands of teetotalers upon its rolls. When such an organization gets a few thousand voters behind it, you will note a change of sentiment from the home of the oyster in the east to the home of the salmon in the west."

A lodge of the International Association of Machinists in St. Louis sent in a petition of protest signed by every member of the lodge, according to the letter accompanying it, with the home address of each signer. From Coos County, Oregon, it was said a letter had been received which said that "people holding the same views as your association have been waiting for some one to start the exact fight you are waging, and hope that the Bolshevism of prohibition can be throttled. We have, right here in Coos County, and have had for four years, a gang of incompetents doubling with bootleggers and double crossing bootleggers' patrons. As a result of prohibition in Oregon, many homes have been turned into breweries. People here who, before the State went dry, never took a drink, have violated the law for the excitement of the pursuit and to demonstrate the ineffectiveness of the officials."

Another letter made public by the association was from a New Yorker whose letterpaper carried the crest of a coat of arms whose motto is "Nittimere nec tomero." "Neither to fear nor to be foolhardy." After reading about your association," the letter said, "I wish herewith to offer you my support as a citizen, because I consider this prohibition movement a threat against the country's liberty. Liberty for democracy won by the war abroad is threatened by illegal and unconstitutional legislation forced on the country by professional Bolshevik agitators."

The next meeting of the Executive Committee of the association, it was announced, would be held on Wednesday, when an enlarged plan of organization may be submitted.

Colonel Roosevelt's Attitude.

Mrs. Ida Husted Harper, Chairman of the Department of Editorial Correspondence of the Leslie Woman Suffrage Commission, said yesterday that she felt certain that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt was in favor of the prohibition amendment, because of correspondence she had with him shortly before his death. On Dec. 30 Mrs. Harper sent the following letter to Colonel Roosevelt:

My Dear Colonel Roosevelt:

We are taking the liberty of sending this letter to your home because of its urgency. We have noticed the appeal to you of W. H. Anderson, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, urging you to favor the ratification of the National Prohibition Amendment by the New York Legislature, and this morning we observe the comment of William H. Hirst, counsel for the New York State Brewer's Association. The latter says: "The Constitution of Ohio has just been amended to prevent the Legislature from ratifying an amendment to the Federal Constitution until the people have expressed their will by referendum. It is a good precedent for New York to follow."

You are doubtless aware that this amendment which was recently adopted in Ohio was submitted through an initiative petition circulated by the so-called Home Defense Association of Ohio, a liquor organization. It provides that after the Legislature has ratified a Federal amendment this action shall not be legal until it has been approved by the voters. If, on the contrary, the Legislature defeats the ratification of a Federal amendment, it shall not be submitted to the voters. It seems incredible that such a proposition should be either submitted or accepted, but this was done in Ohio last November. It was aimed primarily at the prohibition amendment, and secondarily at the Federal Suffrage amendment, which is likely soon to be submitted. A Legislature has been elected in Ohio which will ratify both amendments.

The Federal Constitution provides that an amendment shall be submitted to the Legislatures and, if ratified by three-fourths of them, shall become a part of this Constitution. This measure recently adopted in Ohio is not only grossly unjust but plainly unconstitutional, and will be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States by the Anti-Saloon League.

We trust that if you speak at all you will strongly condemn it, for Mr. Hirst says: "It is a good precedent for New York to follow." The fight here in New York State against the ratification of the Federal prohibition amendment is, of course, equally against that of the suffrage amendment and we feel that it would be almost an insult to urge you to stand squarely for the ratification of both, as we are absolutely sure this will be your position. Very sincerely yours,

IDA HUSTED HARPER,
Editorial Chairman National Leslie Suffrage Bureau.

Colonel Roosevelt dictated, on Jan. 3, three days before his death, the following answer to Mrs. Harper's letter:

My dear Mrs. Harper: My inclination is not to answer Mr. Hirst's letter at all. If I do answer it, you have given me information which will probably shape my course. Faithfully yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

In discussing the action of the Assembly in adopting the Prohibition Amendment, William H. Anderson, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, last night said:

"The Republican members of the Assembly by their action in taking the moral side of this moral question have done more to preserve and protect their party for the future than has been done in many a year."

30 STATES CERTIFY PROHIBITION VOTE

Court Order Against Ratification in California Dismissed—Campaign Begun.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24. — Thirty States up to noon today had certified to the State Department the ratification of the Federal prohibition amendment. Illinois and Ohio certificates were received this morning. Forty-two States have ratified the amendment.

Examination of the State Department's files today disclosed that two notices had been received from California. The first arrived Jan. 20, signed by Frank C. Jordan, Secretary of State, and bearing the State seal. Later another came from the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 24.—Dismissal of the order restraining Governor Stephens from certifying the National Prohibition act, was announced here today by the Presiding Judge of the Superior Court. The order was issued Jan. 15, on a motion of Theodore A. Bell, an attorney. Bell departed today for New York and Washington to make a final fight for the California wine interests.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 24.—Plans were outlined in a meeting of the Advisory Board of the Massachusetts Liquor League in this city yesterday for co-operative measures by the liquor interests of the State with those of other States against the ratification of the national prohibition amendment. A subcommittee of ten was appointed which will report at a meeting in Boston next month.

First efforts will be made through legislative channels, according to Joseph A. Gagne of Northampton, President of the League, and if this fails of results the issue will be taken to the highest courts. This is said to be the initial effort of what is intended to be a country-wide movement to prevent ratification.

Y. M. C. A. STILL IN CHARGE.

Continues Soldiers' Education, Chairman Sloane Declares.

William Sloane, Chairman of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., denied last night a report that the staff of the army in France had taken over the direction of educational work among American soldiers, a task which has been within the scope of the overseas activities of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. Sloane said:

"The Y. M. C. A. still has full charge of the educational work done in France and is co-operating in its efforts among the soldiers with General Rees of the American Headquarters Staff, assigned to confer with the Educational Commission of the Y. M. C. A. He is serving in the capacity of liaison officer between General Headquarters and the commission. The courses, which include agriculture, engineering, and kindred subjects are optional for the soldier, the men electing for themselves the branches they wish to study. The Y. M. C. A. is defraying all expenses in connection with this work."

UNABLE TO REVERSE 'DRY' RATIFICATION

Legislatures Bound by Their Original Vote, Washington Authorities Hold.

BAILEY CITES PRECEDENTS

14th and 15th Amendments Raised the Point — Reconsidered Action Was Rejected.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The suggestion that the ratification of the National Prohibition Amendment as a valid part of the Constitution can be affected or upset by any State Legislature recalling its assent to the amendment is not taken seriously in Washington.

All the precedents are against the Federal Government or Congress recognizing that a State, after having ratified a proposed amendment to the Constitution, has any right to switch its position and rescind its vote before the amendment goes into effect. This precedent was established when Congress adopted a resolution declaring that certain States had ratified the Fourteenth Amendment, and directing the Secretary of State to promulgate that amendment as part of the Constitution.

The Congressional resolution named twenty-five States as having ratified the Fourteenth Amendment. Two of the States named in the resolution, New Jersey and Ohio, had withdrawn their consent, but they were nevertheless counted in the resolution as having ratified.

While it is true that this precedent was established by political action, it is nevertheless a precedent that has been followed and assented to by leading constitutional lawyers in the Senate ever since. Joseph W. Bailey of Texas, who was regarded by his colleagues when in the Senate as one of the ablest living authorities on the Constitution, said to-night, when asked by the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES for an opinion, that he thought the precedent established in connection with the consideration of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, although the decision then was a political one, was one that would stand.

Bailey Explains Procedure.

Mr. Bailey pointed out that while precedent and practice had been that a State that had once ratified an amendment could not validly withdraw its assent, it was also true under precedent and practice that States that had once rejected Constitutional amendments and had afterward ratified them were counted as ratifying.

"It looks like a poor rule that won't work both ways," said former Senator Bailey, "but, nevertheless, history will show this was the case, and I believe that the precedents established are all in favor of a State once having ratified not being able to afterward withdraw its assent."

One of the most learned and carefully considered debates the United States Senate has ever known pivoted around this point. On Feb. 22, 1870, the Senate debate arose over the act of the Legislature of New York in attempting to recall the assent of a previous Legislature to the Fifteenth Amendment. That debate is regarded as having pretty effectually clinched the precedent established when Congress counted as States that had ratified the Fourteenth Amendment two States that had first ratified and then withdrawn their assent.

The Fourteenth Amendment was proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress on June 16, 1866, the year after the civil war closed. On July 21, 1868, Congress adopted and transmitted to the State Department a concurrent resolution declaring that "the Legislatures of the States of Connecticut, Tennessee, New Jersey, Oregon, Vermont, New York, Ohio, Illinois, West Virginia, Kansas, Maine, Nevada, Missouri, Indiana, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Iowa, Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Alabama, South Carolina, and Louisiana, being three-fourths and more of the several States of the Union, having ratified the Fourteenth Article of Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, duly proposed by two-thirds of each House of the Thirty-ninth Congress, therefore, resolved, that said Fourteenth Article is hereby declared to be a part of the Constitution of the United States, and it shall be duly promulgated as such by the Secretary of State."

States Withdraw Consent.

New Jersey and Ohio, which had ratified the amendment, afterward withdrew their consent, New Jersey in April, 1868, and Ohio in January, 1868, but Congress nevertheless, in its resolution counted both States as having ratified. After this resolution was passed the Secretary of State, accordingly, issued a proclamation, dated July 20, 1868, declaring that the proposed Fourteenth Amendment "had been" ratified, in the manner hereafter mentioned, by the Legislatures of thirty-six States, viz.:

Connecticut, June 30, 1866; New Hampshire, July 7, 1866; Tennessee, July 19, 1866; New Jersey, Sept. 11, 1866, (and the Legislature of the same State passed a resolution in April, 1868, to withdraw its consent to it); Oregon, Sept. 19, 1866; Vermont, Nov. 9, 1866; Georgia rejected it Nov. 13, 1866, and ratified it July 21, 1868; North Carolina rejected it Dec. 4, 1866, and ratified it July 4, 1868; South Carolina rejected it Dec. 20, 1866, and ratified it July 9, 1868; New York ratified it Jan. 10, 1867; Ohio ratified it Jan. 11, 1867, and passed a resolution in January, 1868, to withdraw its consent; Illinois ratified it Jan. 15, 1867; West Virginia, Jan. 16, 1867; Kansas, Jan. 18, 1867; Maine, Jan. 19, 1867; Nevada, Jan. 22, 1867; Missouri, Jan. 26, 1867; Indiana, Jan. 29, 1867;

Minnesota, Feb. 1, 1867; Rhode Island, Feb. 7, 1867; Wisconsin, Feb. 13, 1867; Pennsylvania, Feb. 13, 1867; Michigan, Feb. 15, 1867; Massachusetts, March 20, 1867; Nebraska, June 15, 1867; Iowa, April 3, 1868; Arkansas, April 6, 1868; Florida, June 9, 1868; Louisiana, July 9, 1868, and Alabama, July 13, 1868. Georgia again ratified the amendment Feb. 2, 1870. Texas rejected it Nov. 1, 1866, and ratified it Feb. 18, 1870. Virginia rejected it Jan. 19, 1867, and ratified Oct. 8, 1869.

The amendment was rejected by Kentucky Jan. 10, 1867; by Delaware Feb. 8, 1867; by Maryland March 23, 1867, and was not afterward ratified by either State.

Hamilton Fish's Ruling.

The story of the Fifteenth Amendment has a direct bearing on the present situation. New York ratified the amendment on April 14, 1869, but the Legislature passed a resolution on Jan. 5, 1870, to withdraw its consent. This action was debated in the Senate on Feb. 22, 1870.

On March 20, 1870, Hamilton Fish of New York, then Secretary of State, issued his proclamation that the Fifteenth Amendment had been ratified. In this proclamation, although New York's Legislature had passed a resolution withdrawing its consent to the amendment, Mr. Fish named New York as one of the States that had ratified.

Mr. Fish's proclamation, however, contained this paragraph:

"And, further, that it appears from an official document on file in this department that the Legislature of the State of New York has since passed resolutions claiming to withdraw the said ratification of the said amendment; which had been made by the Legislature of that State, and of which official notice had been filed in this office."

There were then thirty-seven States. Three-fourths of that number would be twenty-eight. Including New York, twenty-nine States had ratified, but on Jan. 5, 1870, the New York Legislature passed its resolution to withdraw its consent. On Feb. 2, nearly a month later, Georgia ratified. But without Georgia the resolution was declared to have been ratified, and was declared by the Secretary of State to have been ratified by the Legislature of New York.

Why Uncle Sam Turned Teetotaler

The unanimity with which our State legislatures have hastened to ratify the Eighteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution is a source of wonderment to many of our representative newspapers. Thus to the New York Tribune it seems "as if a sailing-ship on a windless ocean were sweeping ahead, propelled by some invisible force," while the New York Times explains the mystery by suggesting that "prohibition seems to be the fashion just as drinking used to be."

The nation-wide sweep of anti-liquor sentiment is accounted for by other well-known publications in more positive terms. The Pittsburg Gazette-Times declares that the abolition of intoxicants is dictated by "the deliberate judgment" of the American people, and the Toledo Blade terms the movement "as remorseless as the rise of tides in the sea," yet the New York World characterizes it as "a most emphatic denial of local self-government."

It not infrequently happens that reports of popular uprisings of grave decisions by the various great powers, and of other important events, printed in the newspapers of one day have to be considerably modified on the next. This is inevitable, in view of the haste with which such news must be rushed to the presses. To obtain a really accurate account of history in the making time must be given for the verification of the facts, which often assume a vastly different form when viewed in their proper perspective. Such a perspective, insuring the absolute reliability of the details presented, is yours from week to week in the interesting articles on current events in THE LITERARY DIGEST. MOVE TO CANCEL 15 BILLIONS IN WAR EXPENSES

House Bill Revokes $7,179,156,944 in Contracts and $8,221,029,294 in Authorizations.

BIG SAVING IN THE ARMY

Reduction in Ordnance Department Alone $9,217,648,304, and Quartermaster $3,756,135,307.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The cessation of war saved the nation billions of dollars through the cancellation of contracts and authorizations. In the deficiency bill reported to the House by the Appropriations Committee, today, contracts for $7,179,156,944 are ordered canceled and authorizations amounting to $8,221,029,294 are withdrawn. If the war had continued another six months it is estimated that the expenditure of both these amounts, or more than $15,000,000,000, would have been necessary.

The bill carries recommendations for appropriations of $295,244,329.45 for the various services of the Government, divided as follows: War Department, $8,443,782.68; Navy Establishment, $280,762,276.56; Civil Service, $7,853,750.37; Navy Department, $154,570.84.

The largest items for which appropriations are recommended follow:

War Department—Temporary employes, $4,000,000; disposition of remains of officers and men, $2,473,782.68.

Navy Department: Bureau of Navigation, $1,551,178.64; Bureau of Yards and Docks, $6,100,000; Bureau of Construction, $15,000,000; Bureau of Steam Engineering, $4,330,882.

Representative Swagar Sherley, Chairman, in his report said:

"The repeal of appropriations and withdrawal of authorizations has been confined to the military and naval establishments, not because funds voted to other departments are all required, for such is not the fact, but because the magnitude of the task made impossible at this time a review of the other departments, and it is hoped that in connection with the Sundry Civil and other bills many of these surplus funds may be dealt with. The committee in recommending that various sums shall be covered into the Treasury does not mean to affirm in any sense that the total of the moneys left with the various bureaus is needed or should be expended, or to approve or disapprove various activities set forth in the hearings. There should, and doubtless will be, large savings made from these balances.

"What the committee has endeavored to do is to cover into the Treasury such sums that plainly are not needed, but as it is necessarily uncertain just to what extent the Government may be able by cancellation of contracts and discontinuance of projects to reduce its obligations, the committee has deemed it wise to leave funds amply sufficient to meet such obligations. To have undertaken to pass judgment on remaining activities would have been to usurp the prerogatives of many of the committees and would have required a detailed examination that would have taken many additional months.

"The labors of the committee have been greatly added to because of the absence of any uniform system of keeping accounts by the various departments, and it desires to express the hope that Congress may provide soon for such a system of accounting. While the work of the committee by some may be thought unnecessary on the ground that the departments probably would not have expended the sums anyway it was the judgment of the committee that it was wise directly to provide against their expenditure, and it cannot be doubted that the examination of their balances and survey of their activities and needs by the various corps of the army and navy brought about by the action of the committee should enable these departments to make savings of many millions."

The following table shows the savings by cancellation of contracts and authorizations:

Text of the Resolution to Create a World League As Unanimously Adopted by Peace Conference

PARIS, Jan. 25.—Following is the text of the resolution relating to the creation of a League of Nations, which was adopted by the plenary session of the Peace Conference today:

The conference, having considered the proposals for the creation of a League of Nations, resolved that:

It is essential to the maintenance of the world settlement which the associated nations are now met to establish that a League of Nations be created to promote international obligations and to provide safeguards against war.

This league should be created as an integral part of the general treaty of peace and should be open to every civilized nation which can be relied on to promote its objects.

The members of the league should periodically meet in international conference and should have a permanent organization and secretaries to carry on the business of the league in the intervals between the conferences.

The conference therefore appoints a committee, representative of the associated Governments, to work out the details of the constitution and the functions of the league and the draft of resolutions in regard to breaches of the laws of war for presentation to the Peace Conference.

Responsibility.

That a commission, composed of two representatives apiece from the five great powers and five representatives to be elected by the other powers, be appointed to inquire and report upon the following:

First—The responsibility of the authors of the war.

Second—The facts as to breaches of the laws and customs of war committed by the forces of the German Empire and their allies on land, on sea, and in the air during the present war.

Third—The degree of responsibility for these offenses attaching to particular members of the enemy's forces, including members of the General Staffs and other individuals, however highly placed.

Fourth—The constitution and procedure of a tribunal appropriate to the trial of these offenses.

Fifth—Any other matters, cognate or ancillary to the above, which may arise in the course of the inquiry and which the commission finds it useful and relevant to take into consideration.

Reparation.

Following is the draft of a resolution in regard to reparation which the conference adopted:

That a commission be appointed, which shall comprise not more than three representatives apiece from each of the five great powers and not more than two representatives apiece from Belgium, Greece, Poland, Rumania, and Serbia, to examine and report:

First—On the amount of reparation which the enemy countries ought to pay.

Second—On what they are capable of paying, and,

Third—On the method, the form, and time within which payment should be made.

International Legislation.

A resolution in regard to international legislation on industrial and labor questions was passed. It reads:

That a commission, composed of two representatives apiece from the five great powers and five representatives to be elected by the other powers represented at the Peace Conference, be appointed to inquire into the conditions of employment from the international aspect and to consider the international means necessary to secure common action on matters affecting conditions of employment and to recommend the form of a permanent agency to continue such inquiry and consideration, in co-operation with and under the direction of the League of Nations.

This resolution was adopted regarding international control of ports, waterways, and railways:

International Control.

That a commission composed of two representatives apiece from the five great powers and five representatives of the other powers be appointed, to inquire and report upon the international régime for ports, waterways, and railways.

CROMWELL DEATHS NOW CONFIRMED

Bordeaux Police Chief Reports That Young Women Committed Suicide.

PARIS, Jan. 25, (Associated Press)—The Commissioner of Police at Bordeaux confirms the report of the suicide of the Misses Gladys and Dorothea Cromwell.

The American Red Cross Headquarters here, in answer to inquiries, says it has been informed that the Misses Cromwell sailed on the French steamer La Lorraine. Friends of the twin sisters accompanied them to the pier.

The officer in charge of the Red Cross party on board the ship sent by wireless to the Red Cross a copy of the note found in the stateroom occupied by the sisters in which they said they intended to commit suicide.

The drowning of the Misses Dorothea and Gladys Cromwell from the French liner La Lorraine soon after the vessel sailed from France is still a mystery to members of their family in New York.

Seymour L. Cromwell, the only brother of the young women, discredits the reports and declared last night at his residence, 169 East Seventy-fourth Street, that he believed a mistake had been made, because of the conflicting dispatches and a cheerful letter he had received from his sisters less than a week ago.

Mr. Cromwell said late last night:

"Not only I, but the State Department and of course the Red Cross have sent cables to France endeavoring to find out some definite explanation. As yet I have received no satisfying word, but I was given to understand when the cables were sent that no answer would be forthcoming for thirty-six hours.

"The only thing that can convince me that such a thing could ever have happened would be to receive a wireless from the liner Espagne, stating that my sisters were not aboard that vessel. Returning from France on La Lorraine is one of my most intimate friends and also two close friends of my partner in business. Wireless messages have been sent to these friends, but as yet no answer has come."

The Misses Cromwell were 22 years old and not 22 as first reported.

North Dakota Nonpartisan League, Controlling Legislature, Plans Legislation.

Special to The New York Times.

BISMARCK, N. D., Jan. 25.—Seven million dollars would be invested by North Dakota in the establishment of a State bank and a system of terminal elevators and flour mills under the industrial program introduced in the State Legislature by the Nonpartisan League, which controls both houses.

Complete revision of the State's scheme of taxation, by which the taxation burden would be transferred from personal property to corporations, incomes, and land, also has been proposed, and has the support of the league majorities, which are bound by a caucus pledge to pass all legislation indorsed by such caucus.

The abandonment of the old system of appointive State officials for fixed terms also is due, with the substitution of the Socialist plan, by which officers such as State Tax Commissioners, educational directors, charitable institution directors, &c., may be removed at will.

These, in a general way, are the big problems which confront the Legislature, now twenty days old, and which William Lemke, Vice President of the Nonpartisan League, says will be adjourned by Feb. 10.

This is the first State Legislature completely controlled by the nonpartisans. They have more than two-thirds of the members of the House and Senate, and by using emergency clauses in their administration measures they will come very near to beating referendum of their bills, as 30,000 signatures are required to refer bills to which emergency clauses are attached, and the State has only about 100,000 voters all told.

In carrying out their program for industrial enterprises, the nonpartisans

REDS WANT PARLEY NEARER

Tchitcherin, Foreign Minister, Says Princes' Islands Are Too Remote.

BUT WILL CONSIDER PLAN

Promises to Do So on Receipt of Confirmation of Council's Reported Decision.

TAKES A SUPERCILIOUS TONE

Invitation Comes, He Says, When Soviets Have Settled Internal Troubles of Russia.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—M. Tchitcherin, the Bolshevist Foreign Minister, has sent a wireless message to the Soviet representative in Sweden asking for confirmation of the decision of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference to send a mission to confer with representatives of the different factions in Russia on Princes' Islands.

M. Tchitcherin's message says that the islands are too remote for such a meeting. He objects to the isolation of the islands as tending to surround the conference with secrecy, and also objects to leaving to the Entente the choice of participants.

This proposition of the Supreme Council, the message says, is made at a time when the Bolsheviki are victorious over their opponents and the internal situation of Russia has been settled, but the Soviet Government, on receipt of the confirmation requested, will carefully consider the proposal.

More Russians Enter Protests.

The Council of the national and democratic bloc of Russian political organizations abroad has sent a strongly worded protest to Premier Clemenceau against the decision of the Supreme Council to call a conference of the Russian factions.

"We would be men without honor and courage if we accepted for a single moment a truce such as proposed to us while all that are dear are in danger of death—violent death by execution or assassination or slow death through hunger," the protest says.

"The interest of humanity in general and democracy in particular requires the establishment in Russia of a régime based on the sovereignty of the people freely expressed. An improvised meeting at the Princes' Islands cannot be an expression of this sort. Russia has long clamored for the free election of a Constituent Assembly. This attempt was stifled by the Bolsheviki by force of arms, and they are today asked to make the voice of Russia heard!"

The Russian Bolshevist Government at Moscow, according to information received by the Socialist newspaper L'Humanité, is surprised that the suggestion made by the allied and associated Powers for a conference between the Russian factions comes at a time when the Bolsheviki are victorious in the field. The Bolsheviki, however, the advices add, do not reject the principle of a conference.

Vladimir Bourtseff, a well-known Russian revolutionist, in an article in the Matin says that the Russian parties opposed to the Bolsheviki will positively refuse to attend the conference on Princes' Islands, because they look on the Bolsheviki as traitors to the fatherland and as murderers who have dishonored Russia.

Vasili Maklakoff, the latest Russian Ambassador accredited to France, according to the same article, says that all Russians in Paris feel deeply humiliated by the proposal of the allied and associated Powers. The Ambassador adds that a party truce and cessation of hostilities, as requested by the Allies, could have only one result—the hampering of the armies which are about to liberate Northern Russia—without putting an end to the reign of terror. The Ambassador is also quoted as declaring that only the Bolsheviki will profit by such a conference.

Alluding to the decision of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference to send a delegation to meet representatives of the various Russian factions, which decision has been objected to in some Russian quarters as not in the real interest of the Russian people, M. Maklakoff said yesterday:

"The presence of France and America at the Peace Conference is a guarantee that any unfriendly intention toward Russia, even if there were such, would not be countenanced. It is most strange, however, that France, which on Dec. 29, in alluding to Bolshevism while stating her attitude toward Russia, declared that she would 'never have anything to do with crime,' should now have joined in the proposal to hold a discussion with Bolshevist delegates at the Princes' Islands."

It may be noted in connection with the attitude of Ambassador Maklakoff to-

Text of Wilson's Speech to Peace Conference Pointing Out Need of a League of Nations

PARIS, Jan. 25.—President Wilson's address before the Peace Conference today was as follows:

Mr. Chairman—I consider it a distinguished privilege to be permitted to open the discussion in this conference on the League of Nations. We have assembled for two purposes, to make the present settlements which have been rendered necessary by this war and also to secure the peace of the world, not only by the present settlements but by the arrangements we shall make at this conference for its maintenance.

The League of Nations seems to me to be necessary for both of these purposes. There are many complicated questions connected with the present settlements, which perhaps cannot be successfully worked out to an ultimate issue by the decisions we shall arrive at here. I can easily conceive that many of these settlements will need subsequent consideration; that many of the decisions we make shall need subsequent alteration in some degree, for if I may judge by my own study of some of these questions they are not susceptible for confident judgments at present.

It is therefore necessary that we should set up some machinery by which the work of this conference should be rendered complete.

We have assembled here for the purpose of doing very much more than making the present settlements that are necessary. We are assembled under very peculiar conditions of world opinion. I may say, without straining the point, that we are not the representatives of Governments, but representatives of the peoples.

It will not suffice to satisfy governmental circles anywhere. It is necessary that we should satisfy the opinion of mankind.

The burdens of this war have fallen in an unusual degree upon the whole population of the countries involved. I do not need to draw for you the picture of how the burden has been it own back from the front upon the older men, upon the women, upon the children, upon the homes of the civilized world, and how the real strain of the war has come where the eyes of the Government could not reach, but where the heart of humanity beats.

We are bidden by these people to make a peace which will make them secure. We are bidden by these people to see to it that this strain does not come upon them again. And I venture to say that it has been possible for them to bear this strain because they hoped that those who represented them could get together after this war and make such another sacrifice unnecessary.

It is a solemn obligation on our part, therefore, to make permanent arrangements that justice shall be rendered and peace maintained.

This is the central object of our meeting. Settlements may be temporary, but the action of the nations in the interest of peace and justice must be permanent. We can set up permanent processes. We may not be able to set up a permanent decision.

Therefore, it seems to me that we must take as far as we can a picture of the world into our minds. Is it not a startling circumstance, for one thing, that the great discoveries of science, that the quiet studies of men in laboratories, that the thoughtful developments which have taken place in quiet lecture rooms have now been turned to the destruction of civilization? The powers of destruction have not so much multiplied as they have gained facilities.

The enemy, whom we have just overcome, had at his seats of learning some of the principal centres of scientific study and discovery, and he used them in order to make destruction sudden and complete. And only the watchful and continuous co-operation of men can see to it that science, as well as armed men, is kept within the harness of civilization.

In a sense the United States is less interested in this subject than the other nations here assembled. With her great territory and her extensive sea borders, it is less likely that the United States should suffer from the attack of enemies than that other nations should suffer. And the ardor of the United States—for it is a very deep and genuine ardor—for the society of nations is not an ardor springing out of fear or apprehension, but an ardor springing out of the ideals which have come in the consciousness of this war.

In coming into this war the United States never for a moment thought that she was intervening in the politics of Europe, or the politics of Asia, or the politics of any part of the world. Her thought was that all the world had now become conscious that there was a single cause of justice and of liberty for men of every kind and place.

Therefore, the United States should feel that its part in this war should be played in vain if there ensued upon it abortive European settlements. It would feel that it could not take part in guaranteeing those European settlements unless that guarantee involved the continuous superintendence of the peace of the world by the associated nations of the world.

Therefore, it seems to me that we must concern our best judgment in order to make this League of Nations a vital thing—a thing sometimes called into life to meet an exigency—but always functioning in watchful attendance upon the interests of the nations, and that its continuity should be a vital continuity; that its functions are continuing functions that do not permit an intermission of its watchfulness and of its labor; that it should be the eye of the nations, to keep watch upon the common interest—an eye that did not slumber, an eye that was everywhere watchful and attentive.

And if we do not make it vital, what shall we do? We shall disappoint the expectations of the peoples. This is what their thought centres upon.

I have had the very delightful experience of visiting several nations since I came to this side of the water, and every time the voice of the body of the people reached me, through any representative, at the front of the plea stood the hope of the League of Nations.

Gentlemen, the select classes of mankind are no longer the governors of mankind. The fortunes of mankind are now in the hands of the plain people of the whole world. Satisfy them, and you have justified their confidence not only, but have established peace. Fail to satisfy them, and no arrangement that you can make will either set up or steady the peace of the world.

You can imagine, I dare say, the sentiments and the purpose with which the representatives of the United States support this great project for a League of Nations. We regard it as the keynote of the whole, which expressed our purposes and ideals in this war and which the associated nations have accepted as the basis of a settlement.

If we return to the United States without having made every effort in our power to realize this program, we should return to meet the maddest storm of our fellow citizens. For they are a body that constitute a great democracy. They expect their leaders to speak their representatives to be their servants.

We have no choice but to obey their mandate. But it is with the greatest enthusiasm and pleasure that we accept that mandate. And because this is the keynote of the whole fabric, we have pledged our every purpose to it, as we have to every item of the fabric. We would not dare abate a single item of the program which constitutes our instructions; we would not dare to compromise upon any matter as the champion of this thing—this peace of the world, this attitude of justice, this principle that we are the masters of no peoples, but are here to see that every people in the world shall choose its own masters and govern its own destinies, not as we wish, but as they wish.

We are here to see, in short, that the very foundations of this war are swept away. Those foundations were the private choice of a small coterie of civil rulers and military staffs. Those foundations were the aggression of great powers upon the small. Those foundations were the holding together of empires of unwilling subjects by the duress of arms. Those foundations were the power of small bodies of men to wield their will and use mankind as pawns in a game. And nothing less than the emancipation of the world from these things will accomplish peace.

You can see that the representatives of the United States are, therefore, never put to the embarrassment of choosing a way of expediency, because they have had laid down before them the unalterable lines of principles. And, thank God, these lines have been accepted as the lines of settlements by all the high-minded men who have had to do with the beginning of this great business.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, when it is known, as I feel confident it will be known, that we have adopted the principle of the League of Nations and mean to work out that principle in effective action, we shall by that single thing have lifted a great part of the load of anxiety from the hearts of men everywhere.

We stand in a peculiar cause. As I go about the streets here I see everywhere the American uniform. Those men came into the war after we had uttered our purpose. They came as crusaders, not merely to win a war, but to win a cause. And I am responsible to them, for it falls to me to formulate the purpose for which I asked them to fight, and I, like them, must be a crusader for these things, whatever it costs and whatever it may be necessary to do in honor to accomplish the object for which they fought.

I have been glad to find from day to day that there is no question of our standing alone in this matter, for there are champions of this cause upon every hand. I am merely avowing this in order that you may understand why, perhaps, it fell to us, who are disengaged from the politics of this great continent and of the Orient, to suggest that this was the keystone of the arch, and why it occurred to the generous mind of your President to call upon me to open this debate. It is not because we alone represent this idea, but because it is our privilege to associate ourselves with you in representing it.

I have only tried in what I have said to give you the fountains of the enthusiasm which is within us for this thing, for those fountains spring, it seems to me, from all the ancient wrongs and sympathies of mankind, and the very pulse of the world seems to beat to the fullest in this enterprise.

CONFERENCE ACTS SWIFTLY

Hears Speeches in Favor of League and Gives Quick Approval

FIRST ADDRESS BY WILSON

Lloyd George Warmly Voices Great Britain's Support of the Proposal.

ORLANDO ALSO BACKS IT

Wilson and House Are American Members of Commission to Draft League Plan.

Delegates of Great Powers on Peace League Commission

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The delegates of the Great Powers on the League of Nations, it was learned tonight, will be:

For the United States—President Wilson and Colonel Edward M. House.

For Great Britain—Lord Robert Cecil and General Jan Christian Smuts.

For France—Leon Bourgeois and Ferdinand Larnaude, Dean of the Faculty of Law of the University of Paris.

For Italy—Premier Orlando and Vittorio Scialoia.

For Japan—Viscount Chinda and K. Ochiai.

The delegates of the small nations will be announced later.

PARIS, Jan. 25, (Associated Press.)—The plenary session of the Peace Conference today unanimously adopted the project to establish a League of Nations and name a commission to draft the complete plan.

President Wilson and Colonel House are the two American members of the commission.

The session of the conference began at 3 o'clock in the afternoon in the Salle de la Paix of the Foreign Office with the same imposing setting as the first session, but with little ceremony and a manifest purpose of business.

M. Clemenceau was again in the chair, with President Wilson and the full American delegation at his right, and Premier Lloyd George and the British delegation at his left.

When the session opened it was addressed by President Wilson on the subject of the proposed world league.

The President declared that the conference had solemn obligations to make a permanent settlement.

With great earnestness he asserted that the conference could not complete its work until some further machinery of settlement should be set up.

"We are not here alone," he went on, "as representatives of Governments, but as representatives of peoples, and in the settlements we make we need to satisfy, not the opinions of Governments, but the opinion of mankind."

League Must Have Continuity.

The President contended that a League of Nations must be a vital thing and not casual or occasional. It must have continuity.

"It should be the eye of nations, an eye which never slumbers," he added.

On his travels, the President said, people everywhere had greeted the league as the first thing in their interest.

"Select classes of men no longer direct the affairs of the world," said the President, "but the fortunes of the world are now in the hands of the plain people."

The wish of the people, therefore, must be heard. The war had swept away those old foundations by which small coteries had "used mankind as pawns in a game." Nothing but emancipation from the old system, he contended, would accomplish real peace.

The President said he had seen American soldiers in the street—soldiers who had come, not alone for war, but as "crusaders in a great cause." He added, "And I, like them, must be a crusader, whatever it costs to accomplish that end."

After declaring that the conference was for the purpose of a settlement arising out of the war, and to make peace for the world, the President said:

"A League of Nations seems necessary for both purposes. There are many questions which we feel cannot ultimately be worked out here, that may require subsequent consideration, subsequent alterations even to some degree."

He described how the war burden was borne by the people as well as by the armies, and said:

"We are bidden by these sufferers to make peace secure for them and see to it that the strain need never be borne again."

Britain for It, Says Lloyd George.

Following the reading of a translation of President Wilson's speech, Premier Lloyd George said:

"I rise to second this resolution. After the noble speech of the American President, I feel that no observations are needed in order to commend this resolution to the Conference, and I should not have intervened at all, had it not been that I wished to state how emphatically the people of the British Empire are behind this proposal.

"And if the national leaders have not been able during the last five years to devote as much time as they would like to its advocacy, it is because their time and their energy have been absorbed in the exigencies of a terrible struggle.

"Had there been the slightest doubt in my mind as to the wisdom of this scheme, it would have vanished before an irresistible appeal made to me by the spectacle I witnessed last Sunday. I visited a region which but a few years ago was one of the fairest in an exceptionally fair land. I found it a ruin and a desolation.

"I drove for hours through a country which did not appear like the habitation of living men and women and children, but like the excavation of a province, shattered and torn. I went to one city, where I witnessed a scene of devastation that no indemnity can ever repair—one of the beautiful things of the world disfigured and defaced beyond repair.

"And one of the cruelest features to my mind was what I could see had happened—that Frenchmen, who love their land almost beyond any nation, in order to establish the justice of their cause had to assist the cruel enemy in demolishing their homes, and I felt that these are the results—only part of the results.

"Had I been there three months ago, I would have witnessed something that I dare not describe. But I saw acres of graves of the fallen. And these were the results of the only methods, the only organized methods, that civilized nations have ever attempted or established to settle disputes amongst each other. And my feeling was: Surely it is time that a saner plan for settling disputes between peoples ought to be established than this organized savagery.

"I don't know whether this will succeed. But if we attempt it, the attempt will be a success, and for that reason I second the proposal."

Italy's Premier Indorses Plan.

The Italian Premier, Vittorio Orlando, followed Lloyd George. He declared that no people were readier to accept the League of Nations in its entirety than the Italian people.

Leon Bourgeois, a veteran French supporter of the League of Nations, spoke next, pledging the French to do everything "that can help to put us on the road which has been pointed out by President Wilson."

"I should like to ask," said Premier Hughes of Australia, "if we are to have an opportunity to discuss this scheme when it is finished."

"Without any doubt," responded M. Clemenceau.

The Chinese delegates added their support to the resolution, saying that China associated herself in the lofty ideals expressed. The Polish delegates and Camille Huysmans, head of the Belgian delegation, added their strong approval.

"Is there any objection to the resolution?" asked M. Clemenceau. There was no response and he declared the resolution unanimously adopted.

M. Clemenceau then announced the composite committee, and the order of the names as announced makes President Wilson Chairman.

Louis Klotz of the French delegation proposed a financial section to the League of Nations, but the proposal finally went over.

M. Clemenceau proposed another plenary session on Monday for the selection of committees, and without division this was adopted. At 6 o'clock the council adjourned until 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Small Powers Make Demands.

The first sign of a division in the conference was when it proceeded to consider the four resolutions framed by the Council of the Great Powers, providing for committees on labor, responsibility for the war, reparation for damages, and ports, railways, and waterways.

Camille Huysmans, in behalf of Belgium, asked for two members on the Committees of Labor, Reparation, and the League of Nations, and one each on the others. Serbia made a similar request.

Brazil was more emphatic, declaring against "a cut-and-dried program," and saying that the conference should be master of its own decisions.

M. Venizelos said that Greece was entitled to membership on the Committees of Reparation and Ports. M. Bratiano, for Rumania, and Dr. Benes, for Czechoslovakia, as well as the delegations representing Portugal, China, Siam, and Poland, also asked for places on the committees.

It looked for a time as if the small nations had formed a bloc and would contest the decisions of the great powers to restrict the committees.

"We will have something to say," declared Dr. Benes, "in winding up the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and it is difficult to understand how any committee can act without information that the Czechoslovaks alone can give."

M. Bratiano added:

"The smaller nations have greater interests at stake than the great powers on many of these questions."

M. Clemenceau finally, in a good-tempered speech, said that the council had not imposed its decision, but had simply convoked the conference to consider the plan.

"After forty-eight years of public life," he said, "I am satisfied that the larger the committee is, the less it accomplishes. I beg the delegates not to waste time on questions of procedure when millions of men are waiting to be demobilized. Let us organize the committees at once, and so get to work. We have no desire to be unjust to any one, but wish to devise a procedure leading to rapid results."

M. Clemenceau's assurance that the council would consider the questions raised finally prevailed, and Belgium, on behalf of the smaller powers, withdrew the protests, saying that the position having been cleared they trusted to the fairness of the council.

The resolutions were adopted without change.

PARIS, Jan. 25, (Havas.)—At the Peace Conference this afternoon, the permanent Chairman, M. Clemenceau, read a resolution on the League of Nations to the effect that such a league was to be organized by international co-operation for the purpose of making secure international obligations and safeguarding the nations against war. The league would be an integral part of the peace treaty and would be open to all civilized nations favoring its aims.

The Conference appointed a commission representing the Associated Governments to elaborate a constitution for the league, including its prerogatives.

LEAGUE PLAN TO MOVE FAST.

Wilson Ready to Work Ten Hours a Day, He Tells Delegates.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—Rapid and substantial strides toward the real objects of the Peace Conference are expected as a result of today's session.

With the League of Nations question formally before them for discussion, the delegates are expected to work continuously at the task, possibly ten hours a day. President Wilson, it is said, has told the delegates he would be willing to work ten hours a day until tangible results are ready for announcement to the world.

While much of the ensuing discussion will be in secret, according to the rule of procedure now in force, there is reason to believe that more sessions may be public than had been expected, especially while a League of Nations is being discussed.

Without any official outline of the President's plan for a league before the public, a comparison of what Premier Lloyd George has in mind with what the President may propose is only partly in order, but it may be said, on the authority of those in a position to know what is in the President's mind, that the British outline very generally accords with the principles toward which the American group has been working.

The outstanding principle, expressed in the British outline which declares that a distinction must be realized between justiciable disputes and non-justiciable disputes and that each State must be the final judge whether or not a dispute is justiciable, is taken in American circles to be quite in line with the developing opinion among all delegates. It has been reported previously that the point has been passed where the creation of a super-sovereignty had been considered feasible.

The general outlines of the British plan are taken in American quarters to be in consonance with the generally crystallizing idea here that the league probably will be projected as a sort of a guardianship for smaller nations, extending international assistance for the development and preservation of economic and financial, as well as military, sovereignty. It is pointed out in American circles, however, that a full measure of comparison cannot be made until President Wilson makes a statement on his own ideas, and that he is considering some phase which is not expressed in the British outline.

President Wilson has been giving the proposition almost continuous study, even though engaged in the study of the Russian question and other issues before the Supreme War Council, and has, it is said, his ideas definitely reduced to form in which they can be placed before the Peace Conference.

SEES ERA OF FORCE ENDED.

London Times Applauds Warning to Claimants by Supreme Council.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Commenting on the action of the Supreme War Council in issuing a warning to those who are using armed force in Europe and the East to enlarge their possessions before claims are finally adjusted, The Times says:

"The decisions of the Conference will rest on two sets of considerations and two only. The first set is the result of the war that was terminated by the armistice of November. The armistice ended once and for all the argument of force and for any of the parties to the great suit in international justice which is now opening in Paris to continue to appeal to force is contempt of court.

"The second set of considerations is made up of claims of justice. Various rival nationalities, who are now crying out their claims, are harking back to an era definitely closed by the defeat of Germany in which might was held to determine right. The great powers in the conference, having at the cost of incredible exertions and sacrifices overthrown that old band and set up a new tribunal of justice, must assert their authority against all appeals by violence. We do not mean that all claims that are being put out are necessarily claims that in themselves are unjust. But just or not they will be prejudiced by a continuance of violence. He who asks for justice must come into court with clean hands."

The Manchester Guardian welcomes the action of the Council. It says that some of the "many instances" referred to are notorious. It is well understood, the paper says, that it is painful to have to wait for satisfaction of national aspirations, often of long standing, "until the grain to feed them has been ground by such slow grinding mills as those of the Peace Conference."

"Great Britain's decision to leave such questions as the future of Mesopotamia, Palestine, and the German Colonies to the League of Nations is profoundly important," says The Daily News. "The adoption of such a policy by the British delegation has established the League in its true place in relation to the Peace Congress and invests the whole proceedings of the Congress with an atmosphere of confidence and good will, created by the refusal of a great nation to take advantage of the accident of military possession of valuable territory.

"If Great Britain is ready to give such an effective pledge of her faith in the League of Nations, no other power is left with an excuse for holding back. This decision may well prove to be the greatest victory of the war."

WOULD HAVE LEAGUE STATE SUFFRAGE VIEWS

But Wilson Tells Frenchwomen He Does Not Favor Putting Subject on League Program.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—President Wilson told a delegation of women, representing the working women of France, who called upon him today to urge that the Peace Conference include woman suffrage among the points of settlement, that, much as he sympathized with their cause, he felt that it was entirely a domestic question for the several nations.

He said that he believed that it would be regarded as quite outside the province of the Conference if it undertook to dictate to the several States what their internal policy should be."

The same situation, he added, applied to the question of labor, and it seemed to him that the conference would take some action by expressing its sentiments on these subjects.

"The conference," said the President, "is turning out to be a rather unwieldy body—a very large body, representing many nations, large and small, old and new, and the method of organizing its work successfully will, I am afraid, have to be worked out stage by stage. Therefore, I have no confident prediction to make as to the way in which it can take up questions of this sort."

The President, in his address to the women, paid tribute to the efforts of all women in winning the war, repeating that, as it had been a people's war, he stood for a people's peace. He added that the efforts and sacrifices of the women of France particularly had won the admiration of the world. He continued:

"The people won this war, not the Government, and the people must reap the benefits of this war. At every turn we must see to it that it is not an adjustment between Governments merely but an arrangement for the peace and security of men and women everywhere. Little obscure sufferings daily, unknown privations and unspoken sufferings of the heart are the tragical things of this war. They have been borne at the home, and the center of the home is woman.

"I welcome this opportunity to bring you this message, not from myself merely, but from the great people whom I represent."

LAST WARNING GIVEN TO FIGHTING ALLIES

Paris Council Will Use "the Big Stick" to Curb Boundary Disputes.

ITALY'S TRYING POSITION

Associated with Other Allies in Forbidding Hostilities While Her Troops Confront Jugoslavs.

By CHARLES H. SELDEN.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—The statement issued by the five big powers, warning all nations to cease fighting among themselves over territory the rightful claims to which are to be determined by the Peace Conference itself, is based on the fact that the "firing of the last shot" in Europe on Nov. 11 was merely a pleasant figure of speech.

Literally, many shots have been fired every day since then in numerous boundary disputes among new and old States which technically are friends and Allies. If all the fighting that has been going on since the armistice had been concentrated between two nations it would make a very sizable war in itself, as measured by the standards existing prior to August, 1914.

But it has all been for nothing. Every drop of blood shed this Winter to push the claims of any State one inch beyond the limitations fixed tentatively on Nov. 11 has been shed in vain. More than that, there comes now the warning that "possession gained by force will seriously prejudice the claims of those who use such force."

I asked a French authority if any secret warnings had been given before this public one was sent out to the whole world.

"No," he said significantly, "this is the first and will be the last. It is what you call in America 'the big stick.' It is a very 'big stick.'"

Italy's troops are now opposed to those of the Jugoslavs on territory for which both have conflicting claims which must be settled by the Peace Conference in Paris, and nowhere else, and in no other way. The Italians and Jugoslavs have already had two actual encounters with bloodshed.

Another situation in which Italy figures, and from which hostilities were feared when the warning was given, grows out of her contest with Greece over Albania and the northern half of Epirus. Greek and Italian troops in both of these regions have been perilously near a clash because of the conflicting claims of their Governments.

Other nations to which the warning particularly applies, with a brief statement of the offending acts of each, are as follows:

The Czechoslovaks have been invading parts of Galicia in conflict with the Rumanians. The Rumanians and Serbians are fighting for possession of the disputed Province of the Banat, north of the Danube.

The Poles are invading German Poland, or Posen. This is entirely unnecessary, because Poland will undoubtedly get Posen when the time comes. It is pointed out here that she would have been making better use of her troops if she had used them in a more vigorous effort to hold back the Bolshevist invasion.

The King of the Hedjaz, who will get his Arabian State by peaceful means from the Paris Conference if he will only be patient, has not been fighting yet, but has offended by sending out military expeditions to take possession of territory before the boundaries of his kingdom have been determined.

Although the warning applies technically only to friendly nations, it is supposed to affect Hungary, who is also trying to use some force to save what she can from Rumanian-Czechoslovak encroachments.

This is also a supplementary warning to the various Russian Governments, which have been told that they must cease hostilities as a preliminary to the Marmora Conference. The representatives of several of those Governments in Paris have already intimated that they will disregard the action of the conference and will not participate in any parleys with the Bolsheviki.

Our Troops Barred from Disputes.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The warning issued yesterday by the Supreme Council that territorial claims must come before the Peace Conference unprejudiced by attempts at possession by force is very widely discussed here. It seems to be generally acknowledged that President Wilson was the author of the warning, and that he has a deep feeling in the matter because in at least one instance where small bodies of American troops were under other command they were used to push forward into a territory where the native population would not have tolerated the forces of any European power, but hailed the coming of the Americans with joy. In some of these cases, after the welcome had died down, the population awoke to find that the American troops had departed, and that their towns were in the possession of troops of another nationality.

The President, it is known, took summary action to prevent the use of American forces for such purposes. He has now obtained an agreement in the Peace Conference to warn all nations against such steps.

COSSACKS "LOSING SPIRITS."

Russian Embassy Says They Vainly Await Aid of Allies.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The Russian Embassy today received and made public an offical cablegram from the All-Russian Government at Omsk to the effect that Bolshevist disorders in Siberia have been crushed; that the situation there is good and confidence in the new Government being strengthened, but the dispatch added that Cossacks on the southern Russian front are losing their "splendid spirit, having vainly awaited aid from the Allies for a year."

"The general situation at the front is favorable," the cablegram read. "On the Perm front, the Siberian troops are going splendidly. On the Ufa front temporary reverses were caused, owing to the troops lacking arms. This, however, has been remedied.

"On the southern front the situation is difficult. Orenburg is threatened by the Bolsheviki. The Cossacks there are losing their splendid spirits, having vainly awaited aid from the Allies for a year. To improve their morale, it is desirable that at least small detachments of foreign troops be sent to their assistance. This necessity is being brought to the attention of the Allies, but does not seem to be met with favor by them.

"The interior situation is good and the Government is gaining strongly owing to these favorable developments: Recognition of the Omsk Government by Denikin, (Commander in Chief of the Volunteer Army in the southern regions, with headquarters at Yekaterinodar,) who united all southern Russia; appointment of General Janin, (as commander of the forces of the Omsk Government, and formerly French commander of the Czechoslovak forces); favorable solution of the question of relations between General Janin, General Knox, and Admiral Kolchak; agreement as to allied assistance relative to the railways, which are badly disorganized; appointment of Sazonoff, (Foreign Minister of the Yekaterinodar Government as Foreign Minister of the Omsk Government,) and, finally, the expected settlement of the Semenoff incident.

"Confidence in the Government is strengthening on behalf of political parties, owing to the recent declarations which determine the political course and are favorably adopted by all.

"Feeble Bolshevist disorders which have occurred in several towns indicate that Bolshevism has been entirely crushed. The greatest difficulties still arise owing to the lack of monetary signs of merchandise and disorganization of transportation."

The embassy made public also the following cablegram from the Government of the Northern Regions at Archangel:

"By order of Tschaikovsky, President of the Provisional Government of the Northern Regions, Lieut. Gen. Miller has been appointed Governor General of the Northern Regions. Mr. Ignatieff has been appointed member of the Provisional Government in the capacity of Chief of the Department of the Interior.

"Government monopoly of leather has been abolished. Important measures concerning adjustment of land problems are being undertaken. Mobilization is being continued, non-commissioned officers being called up to 30 years of age. The victory of the Siberian troops has been solemnly celebrated in all the churches. The commissary arriving from Siberia communicated that Siberian troops were advancing toward the River Petokora and that their junction with the northern troops will take place shortly.

"Tschaikovsky is leaving for Paris to attend the conference there."

SAYS FRANCE FACES TRADE WAR WITH FOE

Hurley Predicts All German Energy Will Go Into Commerce—Sure France Can Compete.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—France now faces a commercial struggle with Germany, Edward N. Hurley, Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, said at a Franco-American dinner tonight, and must prepare to meet German competition which will be organized with the energies formerly devoted to making war. The end of the war, Mr. Hurley added, cannot be considered as having come until France is entirely rehabilitated commercially.

For twenty-five years, Mr. Hurley said, Germany devoted 50 per cent. of her efforts toward commercial lines and the rest to building up her great military machine. As no such machine will be permitted in the future, he added, all her efforts will be devoted to commerce.

"Say what you will about her methods," he declared, "she has demonstrated her efficiency in commerce, and with her whole effort devoted in the future to trade, the other nations of the world will always have a formidable competitor, no matter what restrictions it becomes advisable to put in her path. To solve this problem France must organize, as she cannot meet it by relying on isolated individual efforts."

French products, Mr. Hurley proposed, should be protected with a "Made in France" trade mark vigorously protected against infringement. Shipping, he said, must be furnished at fair and equal rates in order to give all nations an equal footing in manufacturing and selling genius. The American Shipping Board, he hoped, would be of assistance to France by furnishing ships to increase the French merchant marine.

"The commerce and authority of France," Mr. Hurley concluded, "are now free to make her a greater nation than she ever was before. You will, with your energy and skill, place her in a position in which the world wants her to be—one of the leading nations of commerce and industry. If the people of France will enthusiastically support their commercial and industrial leaders as they supported their gallant army, I have no fear that her devastated regions will be quickly rehabilitated and her trade and commerce restored as important factors throughout the world. Your commercial future and supremacy are before you. You have another duty to perform—to reorganize, to reoperate, to make the wheels of French industry turn again and thus become a great commercial power."

INSIST ON RHINE FRONTIER.

Even French Literary Men Express Annexationist Views to Wilson.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—A sample of the things that the French insist upon in their talks with President Wilson, as he receives one small group after another, is afforded by the conversation that four members of the Society of Men of Letters had with him on Wednesday. The four were: Georges Lecomte, President of the society; General Malleterre, the Abbé Wetterle, who represented Alsace-Lorraine for many years in the German Reichstag, and Firmin Roz.

Like so many others who have seen him, they told him that the Germans must be pushed back beyond the Rhine, not only in Alsace-Lorraine and the Sarre Valley immediately north, but from the entire left bank region. They told him they needed peace for their efforts as thinkers and their tasks as writers.

They believed his League of Nations was one safeguard of peace, but France, which had been invaded four times in a century, needed other security for its future, which could be afforded only by ridding the whole left bank in perpetuity of all German soldiers and fortifications.

Mr. Wilson made no comment.

WILSON TO VISIT RHEIMS TODAY

Plans Another Short Trip to the Battle Area Between Conference Sessions.

MAY SEE VERDUN NEXT

Mrs. Wilson and Admiral Grayson to Accompany Him—French Officer as Guide.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—President Wilson will have his first view on Sunday of the havoc wrought in Northern France by the Germans. On that day he will make the first of a series of short trips by going to Rheims, from which he will tour the surrounding district in an army motor car.

Later the President expects to make another visit to the battle area, probably the region of Verdun. He will go on a Sunday or some other day between the sessions of the Peace Conference when he feels he is not taking the time he thinks he should devote to business.

The President will take a very small party. It will include Mrs. Wilson, Rear Admiral Grayson, and a French Army officer who is familiar with the field and military operations that took place there, and who will explain the situation to the President as they go along.

Although the President has been strongly urged by the French authorities to visit the devastated districts as one of the first events of his visit to France, he has not considered that he has had the time until now. His views on the question of reparation by Germany have been fairly well defined by those about him, and what effect, if any, his visit to the ruined regions may have on his opinions in that regard is the subject of lively discussion among Frenchmen.

AMERICA AND BRITAIN AS HOPE OF OPPRESSED

Balfour's Vision of a Heart Union of the English-Speaking Peoples.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Arthur J. Balfour makes a striking pronouncement on the services which the United States and the British Empire can render to small and oppressed nations as joint trustees of civilization in a foreword which he has contributed to the first number of The Landmark, the new organ of an English-speaking union.

"That we shall always be friendly countries," he says, "I do not doubt, but that does not content me in the least. I want something much more than that. I want every member, every citizen of the British empire whether he lives in this small island or whether he belongs to the great British dominions over seas, and every citizen of the great American republic to feel that they are joint trustees for civilization and the world of those principles of peace and of liberty for which we are all struggling at this moment and I believe that that is what will happen, and I believe that the time will come when all small and oppressed nations will instinctively look, and not look in vain, to the all-powerful protection of international arrangements of which the heart—very heart and essence will be the union of soul, the union of sentiment, the union of belief of the great free English-speaking community now scattered over the whole world."

STRAUS OFF TO CONFERENCE

Will Represent League to Enforce Peace at Paris Discussions.

The White Star liner Lapland sailed at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon for Liverpool with 366 first, 241 second, and 235 third class passengers, which is the largest number taken from this port on any one steamship since the armistice was signed on Nov. 11.

One of the first cabin passengers was Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, widow of the former Ambassador to England, who is returning to continue her work there with the American Red Cross. Oscar S. Straus, Chairman of the League to Enforce Peace, who was accompanied by his wife, said that he was going over by invitation to confer with representatives of the league in England, France, and Italy.

Mr. Straus said that he expected to meet Lord Bryce, former British Ambassador to the United States; Lord Grey, and M. Bourgeois, former Premier of France.

When asked about his plans for the Peace Conference discussions at Paris, Mr. Straus replied:

"We shall stand behind the plan of President Wilson for a League of Nations and report to the league here, of which former President Taft is the head, in order to aid them in their propaganda throughout the United States, which begins soon. It is our purpose to translate victory in war into a victory in peace for our children and our children's children.

"I think yet it will serve its purpose for the League of Nations was built on The Hague Conference, but now it has the sanction of power behind it."

There were also on the Lapland a number of bankers, merchants, and business men including Frank Vanderlip, President of the National City Bank; Albert Strauss, Vice Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank, who said they were going over on a mission at the request of Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass. Other passengers were C. F. Kelley, President of the Anaconda Copper Mine; R. L. Agassiz, President of the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company, and S. R. Guggenheim of the American Smelting and Refining Company, who said that it was the first time in four and a half years that any member of his firm had been to Europe.

An industrial commission appointed by Secretary of Labor Wilson to study industrial conditions abroad also sailed. The Secretary was at the pier to see the party off. The commission is headed by E. T. Gulacho of Chicago.

Just before the Lapland got away the liner Belgic, which had on board 100 American and British officers, 4,000 sacks of mails, and 18,000 tons of cargo, also got away for Liverpool.

NORTHCLIFFE ATTACK SEEN AS AID TO WILSON

Regarded as Club to Help Him Speed Up Work of Peace Conference.

BY CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—The Northcliffe press editorial attack on the Peace Conference, including a side thrust at President Wilson, created a mild sensation, but in American circles this criticism was taken smilingly. Every one knows that President Wilson has been working sleeplessly to speed up action, and he is probably not disappointed at his inclusion in Northcliffe's general criticism of delay.

Until he went South for reasons of health, Northcliffe was working hand in glove with Colonel House, and it is shrewdly suspected that the present criticism is a piece of finesse with a club to help Wilson in his fight on procrastination in such a way as not to create feeling against the President among the dilly-dallying European diplomats. Wilson and Northcliffe share the same opinion regarding the danger of delay.

Today's communiqué's reference to the grab game being played in Southeastern Europe takes the bull by the horns in matters that have been causing serious concern for weeks past. The plain terms in which the Peace Conference deals indicate that patience at last is exhausted, and that acts committed in the intoxication of victory no longer will be tolerated.

It is believed that the tumult produced by the action of the conference in dealing with the Bolsheviki will soon subside and that the Prinkipos program will be duly carried out. The Russian problem is so difficult that whatever is done is bound to encounter objection.

Bolshevism is now considered the paramount peril, and inasmuch as military intervention is a measure from which every ally flinches, some other way out must be found.

In this connection there is apparent a slightly changed feeling regarding Germany and a disposition to watch the progress of movements there with an approach to an interest that is not bitterly hostile.

German stabilization on a democratic basis would undoubtedly be a big point in the game. It would confine Bolshevism within Russian limits. Any sticks are good enough to beat the dog with.

The forecast cabled you a week ago, showing the progress in American plans and predicting early results of a substantial character, is borne out by the growing confidence of insiders.

President Wilson has gained a strong position here, and such criticism as that of Senator Harding impairs it less than it would have done a month ago. In some ways such attacks actually help Wilson as suggesting that unless Europe receives help from the President she needn't expect it from any other quarter.

FILE NEW RUSSIAN PROTEST.

Loyal Organizations Here Will Continue to Fight Bolshevism.

The decision of the Peace Conference to propose parleys with all the Russian Governments is asserted to be a fatal and historical error in an advertisement published today and signed by the Executive Board of the General Committee of Russian National Defense, the Voluntary Association of the Russian Army and Navy Officers in the United States, and the Union of Russian Engineers.

The advertisement is in the form of a resolution, and it says that the decision of the allied Governments is likely to strengthen the Bolshevist cause at the very moment when Trotzky's régime is on the verge of complete collapse; "that, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Council, the loyal Russian organizations feel their duty and will continue their fight against the Russian Bolshevist traitors." "We are deeply convinced," it continues, "that the loyal Russian delegates should meet the Allies' representatives either in Paris or nowhere."

The statement asserts that it is the opinion of the organizations issuing it that the Bolsheviki in signing the Brest-Litovsk treaty committed treason to Russia; that it has been proved that Russian Soviet officials were on the payroll of the Imperial German Government; that the Bolsheviki have instituted a reign of terror; that they have abolished all the fundamental principles of liberty and civilization in Russia, and that it is contrary to the national dignity of the people of Russia to meet the allied representatives "somewhere in the back yard of Europe."

SEES PEACE LEAGUE AS OUR GREAT NEED

Senator Lewis Tells Pennsylvania Society America's After-War Danger Is Very Real.

HAS FEARS OF BOLSHEVISM

Must Maintain Principles of Monroe Doctrine and Right to Exclude Races.

Speaking last night at the twentieth annual dinner of the Pennsylvania Society at the Waldorf-Astoria on "The Perils to America of a Broken Peace," Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois, Senate whip, declared that there should be no illusions as to why the United States fights for a League of Nations to guarantee peace. "It is not only for France, Britain, or any other nation or people for whom we contend," he added. "It is for ourselves."

If there should be no League of Nations, said Senator Lewis, the United States would be in greater danger than ever in her history. If those who struck for liberty on the summons of this country should fail of their hopes for nationality, he said, and if the Allies should be thwarted "in their efforts to aggrandize their possessions and increase their bounties by any obstruction of our doctrine, these will be our secret enemies and sullenly wait for their hoped for hour."

There should be no surprise, he said, if the destruction of law and the anarchy of all government now rampant in the world shall take its course in Russia, Germany, Japan, and China, and as its first object of gratification turn with a compact of all against the one land each has had a grievance against.

The other speakers were Edouard de Billy, Deputy French High Commissioner; Baron E de Cartier, Minister of Belgium; Captain Alfred F. B. Carpenter, of the Cruiser Vindictive, engaged in the Zeebrugge affair; Governor W. C. Sproul, of Pennsylvania, and Rear Admiral Vincent Blue, U. S. N.

Mr. de Billy made James M. Beck, President of the society, who acted as Chairman, an officer of the Legion of Honor of France. He praised Mr. Beck's labors in behalf of the Allies, and particularly of France, and Mr. Beck responded in a short speech of thanks in which he promised to wear the decoration as his most cherished possession, and said he would bequeath it to his children as his richest legacy.

Mr. Beck read an appreciation of Theodore Roosevelt in the form of a tribute the late President paid to France when he spoke a year ago at the dinner of the society. Mr. Beck substituted the name of Colonel Roosevelt for that of France, and the words appeared to the 1,300 guests as suitable a tribute to Colonel Roosevelt as it was to France when rendered a year ago.

"If the temptations for the continuance of this form of assault and the prospect of rewards for success of power is to be unbroken, then these United States are today in greater danger than ever in her history," said Senator Lewis.

"Hear the truth of your situation. You are richer than any single nation on earth. You are less defended on your coasts than any other sea-bordering nation of the world. You have more deep-seated present envy and ancient grievances to contend against than any other people of any land. If those who were invited to conflict by our summons to rise and strike for liberty shall fall in all their hopes of nationality and much of their expected gains, their disappointment means added enmity to us. If the Allies and their auxiliaries shall be thwarted in any efforts to aggrandize their possessions and increase their bounties by any obstruction of our doctrines, these will be our secret enemies and sullenly wait their hoped-for hour.

"The enemies who were overcome—taking courage from the discontent and revolt of your former friends—will marshal themselves in any array or alliance to revenge their own humiliation. It will all be against us. Now, remember! We are no longer isolated—the air connects us with the uttermost parts of the earth. The inter-crossing airplane is the shuttle weaving distant worlds into one society of men.

"Let there be no surprise if the present sentiment of destruction of law and anarchy of all government, now rampant in the world, shall take its course in Russia, Germany, Japan, and China, with the hordes of their hundreds of millions, and as its first object of gratification turn with a compact of all these against the one land each has had a grievance against. We, the United States—where will we be without some understanding with the nations guided yet by the doctrines of humanity and the law of God? Shall we not have a prospect of great benefit and promise of protection in an assemblage made up of the resources of Canada to the north, South America to the south, and the peoples of the Atlantic Europe, who are of ties of blood and common interest?

"Then is it not for ourselves we prepare? Let us not disguise our tomorrows as we grope again in the blind delusion of our security that so nearly was our national undoing in the yesterdays fresh in our memory.

"It is not necessary that we consume the patience of people or the patriotism of our nation in the useless dispute over the details of the method of arrangement and of the limitations of authority to be granted to the joint tribunals. It is enough that we make a common arrangement that ever reserves our national and international basic principles—for us the Monroe Doctrine and privilege of regulating or excluding races that cannot amalgamate to American principles. We call for an association that provides mutual hopes of preservation founded on the one common insurance of co-operation to compose conflicts redress wrongs and punish violations of faith of those who break the peace.

"In this compact we covenant to avoid interference in the local concerns of any country—refuse to police by military methods the internal discords of foreign continents. On this league of complete understanding we can trust the new awakened sense of justice, we can commit the aroused indignation against world murder—and, fortified in the security infused by the widening and blood-baptized spirit of a Christian brotherhood, we can trust the future disposition of peace and good will to be administered to Governments.

"If these are not our joint safeguards, when united in common purpose, then confess that all we have spent, all we have endured, all we have suffered, for all we stood to gain is in the end but a black, hopeless loss. Only the resurrected soul of barbarism can admit this; only the depths of despair can confess it. Let us behold ourselves for what we are, see what we did, reflect on what we can be, and in the resolve to lead the course of future peace of men and happiness of men by a parliament of man and a federation of the world, bless God that we are Americans."

"We are entitled to ask for guarantees before believing in them," said Mr. de Billy in his address. "Democracy is not a formula, made of words. It is a reality in the minds of men. It means respect of each man's liberty and belief in progress through liberty.

"It also means that the chances are equal for every man, according to his natural gifts, whatever may be his birth or his wealth; that every man, and soon every woman, through the vote, has an equal action in the country's politics; that justice is the same for all.

"It is very important that we should stand firmly by these beliefs, especially now that the enemy, beaten by force of arms, is endeavoring to gain by public intrigue that advantage that he [illegible] by force."

WILSONS GIVE "TEA" FOR HOUSE WORKERS

Guards, Chauffeurs, Telephone Girls, and Servants Are Guests of President and Wife.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—The "tea" given at the Paris White House this afternoon was an event the like of which the French capital had probably never seen. It was exclusively for the working men and women who surround the President and Mrs. Wilson during their stay here. Its purpose was to make them feel that they were members of the official family, no matter what their occupations.

The gendarmes who guard the Murat Palace gates, the Sergeants and buck privates of the American troops that patrol the inner grounds, the chauffeurs who drive the Presidential car about the streets as a happy relief from dispatch riding at the battlefront, the American telephone girls who operate the private exchange and in native fashion frequently protest that "The line is busy," all were there.

Some were bashful, some were completely overcome by stage fright, while others, quite at ease as they were received in democratic fashion and made to feel at home in the drawing rooms of the magnificent palace.

The President and Mrs. Wilson acted as hosts for an hour. The Sergeants of the French Guard gallantly introduced his men, as did the Sergeants of the American Guards. The telephone girls assisted their hostess in pouring tea and receiving the other guests. For the French guests chocolate was substituted for tea, but the Americans took real tea with cakes.

The President and Mrs. Wilson said afterward that the social venture was a genuine success. Their guests said that they were much pleased at their reception.

PRESIDENT ATTENDS OPERA.

Parisians Give Him Stirring Welcome at a Gala Performance.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—President Wilson went to the opera tonight to see a performance of "Castor and Pollux." It was the first time he had gone to a regular performance since he left Washington six weeks ago. The President took with him a very small party including Henry White, General Bliss and Rear Admiral Grayson.

The performance was put on in gala fashion and the audience apparently was a holiday one. Most of those present obviously came for two things—to see the President of the United States and the opera.

Though much of the vast auditorium was taken up by persons of official rank, there was still room for the public which waged merry war all day long with ticket speculators, who probably reaped a harvest as prices, reported by Americans who sought seats, were four or five times the normal.

The President and his party occupied one of the principal boxes and they were the center of attraction. When the President entered he received a tremendous demonstration. "The Star Spangled Banner" was sung and then the "Marseillaise" after which the performance began.

Once between the acts the President and Mrs. Wilson went behind the scenes and shook hands with the principals of the chorus and ballet.

BOLSHEVIKI CAPTURE UFA, IN THE URALS

Russians and Czechoslovaks Fall Back 140 Miles to Mountain Positions.

OMSK, Siberia, Jan. 20, (Associated Press.)—Ufa has fallen to the Bolsheviki, the reverse to the Russian and Czechoslovak forces there being said to be chiefly due to the failure of arms to arrive from Vladivostok. The troops which defended the city have fallen back to Zlatoust, 140 miles to the northeast, where they are making a courageous stand in the gorges of the Ural country. Thousands of rifles have arrived at the front, and have been rushed to Tcheliabinsk, which is not believed to be in danger, for the present at least.

Military experts here realize that the weak points on the Ural front are between Ufa and Tcheliabinsk, and, further south, at Orenburg, where General Dutoff's Cossacks are reported to be worn out by constant pressure from superior forces of Bolsheviki. Negotiations for the dispatch of allied contingents to Orenburg are now going on, but have not as yet been brought to a successful conclusion. The capture of Orenburg would give the Bolshevist control of the railroad running into a rich section of Turkestan and would increase their ability to resist allied and Russian forces.

Unconfirmed reports were received in London on Jan. 23 that Orenburg had been taken by the Bolsheviki.

Farther north Bolshevist forces driven back from Perm when General Gaida's Siberian and Czechoslovak troops took that city have been reorganized and are reported to be fighting desperately along the Kama River. The Bolsheviki are reported to be attempting an advance to the southeast of Perm, in the direction of Ekaterinburg. In spite of the fact that the Russian troops and their comrades are without sufficient clothing and have suffered great hardships, it is believed here that, with General Jules Janin, commander of the Czechoslovak army, in charge of military affairs, and with General Knox of the British Army looking after the equipment of the forces, the situation in this section is favorable.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Travelers reaching Copenhagen and Bergen from Northern Russia, according to advices received here, say that the Bolsheviki are attempting to raise an army of 2,000,000 men for a campaign in South Russia in the Spring.

VLADIVOSTOK, Jan. 23, (Associated Press.)—Orders forbidding political discussions by delegates of provincial Zemstvos, District Councils, and Town Dumas, in conference here, were read at the opening session today by Colonel Kutenko, commander of the Vladivostok fortress. The orders, which are credited to Admiral Kolchak, led to heated debates at the conference. M. Yakushef, a delegate from Irkutsk, said:

"The hopes of democracy are disappointed by the conservative turn of events at Omsk. The only possibility to recover them lies in action by the Zemstvos."

It is stated that antagonism to the Omsk Government will be the result of the incident.

The United States transport Warren, which arrived at noon today, was four days overdue. She was spoken seventy miles out three days ago, but was held up by a storm and lost wireless communication with the cruiser Brooklyn, which is here. The latter was about to start out to search for the transport when news came that she was safe.

RED FLEET DESTROYED?

Every Vessel Engaged in the Bombardment of Revel Reported Sunk.

LONDON, Jan. 24, (British Wireless Service.)—Bolshevist attempts to bombard Revel, the capital of Esthonia, from the sea have resulted in complete failure, according to reports received here. Every vessel in the Red fleet is said to have been sunk.

Riga was saved from attack by Bolsheviki and from disorders within the city by a British fleet which was sent into the Baltic late in December for the purpose of assisting British refugees to leave Russia. Threats of bombardment resulted in immediate representations by British army officers that they were there to keep order, and that they would depart as soon as assurance was given that anarchy would not break out. Bolshevist troops, which were expected to attack the town at any moment, deferred action.

According to stories told by men on board the British warships, the threat of bombardment was, for the most part, a "bluff," as the most the fleet could have done, it is said, would have been to smash up the town. It had the desired effect, however, and the commander of the warships was able to take away every British subject in safety.

SEES NO DANGER IN PEACE LEAGUE

Senator Hitchcock Tells Republican Club It Can Never Be a Super-Nation.

AUTOCRACY'S MENACE GONE

Predicts Formation of a Solemn Agreement to Bring Justice to the World.

Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock of Nebraska, Democrat, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, speaking yesterday at the nonpartisan Saturday discussion at the Republican Club outlined his idea of what the proposed League of Nations might be expected to do, and said it was unthinkable that the United States or Great Britain would permit the league to become either a "supernation" or a "monster" that might crush them.

"I believe the world has entered a new era," Senator Hitchcock said. "I believe the old era has passed and that we do not yet appreciate the tremendous change. Before this war a League of Nations to preserve the peace of the world would have been impossible. When the war began in all the world there remained only three great empires autocratic in form and having as their chief idea conquest.

"One was the Austro-Hungarian Empire, a conquering nation throughout history; another the German Empire, based upon the idea of world conquest, and Russia, whose great dream was conquest toward the Pacific and down toward India and Persia. In all of those great empires a few men had the power for war or peace. Before the war what chance was there for an agreement among nations to put a stop to conquest? They could not have entered into anything of that sort, and if they had entered into it no one could have trusted them, because their very purpose was conquest. But they are gone, and there has been taken out of the world the great obstacle to an agreement among the nations for peace.

"To my mind, it is almost inconceivable that wars of conquest will ever come again in the world as long as it is necessary for representatives of the people in a parliament to actually vote the war."

Senator Hitchcock said he was not in position to define what the League of Nations was to be, but that it was possible to say what it was not to be. It was not, the Senator said, to be a super-nation, or a great military power with an army and a navy. Almost all of the assaults made upon the league idea, Mr. Hitchcock said, were based upon the thought that the league was to be a super-nation.

He gave it as his conception that the league would be a solemn international agreement for the purpose of establishing justice in the world.

The Senator said he could not conceive of an army or a navy great enough to compel the United States to live up to a treaty, but was sure that public opinion here, in Great Britain and France was powerful enough to compel each country to live up to any treaty made. He added that the League of Nations would have that force behind it.

The speaker cited the agreement of the United States, Great Britain, Japan and Russia, to safeguard the Pribiloff Island seals, as in reality a League of Nations. The league now contemplated, he said, was in principle the same as the Pribiloff convention, only wider in scope.

The reduction in taxation sure to follow the inauguration of the league was a big factor in favor of a world league, the Senator held.

Following Senator Hitchcock, the speakers were Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church; Professor Shailer Mathews of Chicago University, and ex-Judge James C. Jenkins, who spent twelve years on the bench in the Philippine Islands.

Dr. Manning said he had learned many things well worth knowing from the boys at Camp Upton while he was there as chaplain. He said that with the war at an end, the American people still had many things to stimulate them. Of these, he mentioned the fourteen points, and George Creel, both of which, he said, were calculated to keep us "guessing." He did not think there was any danger of Bolshevism here, but thought we should be on our guard.

Professor Mathews said that Germany had invented two words, "tag," and "kamerad," and that both meant surrender.

Judge Jenkins told of the big advance made by the inhabitants of the Philippines under the impetus of American control.

SUNK 120 U-BOATS WITH ENTIRE CREWS

Half the Men on the Other 83 Destroyed by the Allies Usually Perished.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Of the 203 German submarines lost during the war it is estimated semi-officially that 120 were sunk with all on board. On the average half the crews of the rest of the U-boats perished.

The complement of German submarines varied. Small boats had only thirty on board, while a boat of the cruiser type averaged fifty to sixty.

Of the fifty-nine British submarines lost, thirty-nine were destroyed by the enemy, four were interned by neutrals, seven were blown up in the Baltic Sea, four were sunk by accident on trial cruises and five were wrecked in collisions.

ward the Bolshevist régime that his own brother, a former Minister under the empire, is supposed to have been killed by the Bolsheviki. The Ambassador sought news of his brother's fate through Harold Scavenius, the Danish Minister to Russia, who reported that all his investigations had proved fruitless, as the Bolshevist massacres were conducted on such a wholesale scale, without even a semblance of trial, that the executioners themselves did not know the names of the victims.

Discussing Japan's attitude on the Russian question, Baron Makino, head of the Japanese delegation to the Peace Conference, said:

"Japan has everything to gain from a prosperous Russia. The richer and the more orderly she is the better customer she makes for our exports, we, in our turn, becoming a good market for the products she has to offer. Therefore, it is to our reciprocal advantage that peace and order be restored in Russia. It is with the greatest regret that we have witnessed the spread of revolt in Russia. Our chief wish is that normal conditions may soon prevail there. Any one who thinks that Japan can have any interest in seeing Russia suffer misfortune must be entirely unaware of the true feelings of the Japanese toward our great neighbor."

Welcomed by a Red Envoy.

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 25, (Associated Press.)—Maxim Litvinoff, Bolshevist emissary here, says that the Bolsheviki will make it a condition of their attendance at the conference of the various Russian factions with allied representatives that full publicity in uncensored form be given the debates.

M. Litvinoff said he had had no communication with the Soviet Government regarding the invitation sent it to take part in the Marmora conference, and could only give his personal views. He said he welcomed the decision of the powers so far as it meant assistance and food to Russia's war-stricken and starving millions, but he thought the place chosen was a very undesirable one, and that many places, both within Russia and outside its borders, could have been found that would have been more suitable.

"Of the meeting itself," he added, "I do not think very much, and doubt if any result will come from it. It will only serve to enable every party to make known its views and aspirations. The Soviet Government, in my opinion, will make it a positive condition for its participation that full and uncensored publicity be given the discussions, which is just what the Entente will not consent to through fear."

CALL TO WORLD OVERTHROW.

Moscow Reds Summon Congress of 'New Revolutionary Internationale.'

ZURICH, Jan. 25.—According to reports received here from Moscow, the "International Communist Congress" there has decided to convoke the first congress of "a new revolutionary Internationale." The Communist Congress, it is stated, has drafted a manifesto setting forth a program based upon those of the German Spartacan Party and the Russian Communist and Bolshevist parties.

The document declares that the present is the period for the overthrow of the world's capitalistic system, and European culture with it. The task of the proletariat today, it says, is to take over governmental power, which must be placed in the hands of a dictatorship constituted by the class of small workers, peasants and agricultural laborers. This dictatorship, it is declared, must immediately expropriate capital and suppress private property, transferring it to the State. The first measure to that end, it is said, must be the disarmament of the bourgeoisie and its agents and the arming of the proletariat, which will have to begin an open armed conflict against the ruling power—capitalism.

The manifesto adds that in dealing with "social patriots who everywhere at the most critical moments oppose the revolution with arms" there is no alternative but to fight without mercy. It says it is necessary to rally together those sections of the proletariat which have given proof of their sympathy with the revolution.

REPUBLICAN FORCES WIN IN PORTUGAL

Monarchists Beaten at Lisbon and Other Points—Manuel's Aid Captured.

MADRID, Jan. 25.—The Portuguese Republicans have captured Monsanto Hill with a large number of Monarchist prisoners, according to dispatches from Lisbon. The remainder of the Monarchists are in flight, leaving their artillery behind. Among the prisoners was Ayres Ornellas, representative of former King Manuel. Count Monsuraz, chief for the "Integralists," was killed.

Republican forces at Coimbra have marched northward and defeated the Monarchists at Aveiro.

LISBON, Jan. 25, (Associated Press.)—An official statement issued tonight says that the insurgents tried in vain to induce the people of Viana, Castello, and Valenca to rise.

"The insurgents of Lisbon have been dislodged from Monsanto Hill," the statement continues, "and are being pursued by republican troops. Other republican troops concentrated in Edward VII. Park and at other points are cooperating in the pursuit of the fugitives. The rest of the country is calm.

"General Pellen, commanding the Lisbon garrison, has resigned because he was unable to make certain units leave their barracks. General Corteral, commanding the interned camp, and Lieut. Col. Cuna, Chief of Staff, have also resigned. They have been replaced by General Silveiro and Captain Doria.

"A sharp cannonade was resumed at dawn between Campo Libre and Monsanto Hill. The morale of the insurgents is low, owing to their reverses and want of food. Shells from Monsanto Hill struck a considerable number of houses inhabited by peaceable persons."

IRISH UNIONISTS SPLIT OVER ULSTER

Southern Members of Alliance Unable to Agree—Midleton Leads New Faction.

DUBLIN, Jan. 25—The meeting of the Irish Unionist Alliance on Friday resulted in a split of that body and the secession of its President, Viscount Midleton, and about 60 members. The cause of the dissension was a resolution proposed by Lord Midleton which, in effect, would exclude representatives of Ulster from the deliberations of the alliance on any home rule scheme involving the separation of Ulster from the rest of Ireland.

The alliance is an organization of Unionists in southern Ireland, among whom differences of opinion have existed for some time. The meeting yesterday applauded a letter from Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, urging northern and southern Unionists to co-operate harmoniously, but ideas on harmony differed and Lord Midleton's proposal was rejected by a large majority. After the withdrawal of Lord Midleton and his followers they formed a new organization to be called the Unionist Anti-Partition League.

The military authorties have seized St. Enda's College, in Dublin County, founded by Patrick Pearse, who was executed in connection with the Easter rebellion in 1916.

Patrick Pearse, the "Provisional President of Ireland," was executed in London on May 3, 1916. At the time of the Easter rebellion he was in charge of St. Enda's, which he had founded after leaving the editorship of the Gaelic Journal. Thomas MacDonagh, who was executed at the same time, was assistant to Pearse at St. Enda's. The school was founded principally for the propagation of the Gaelic language and the Gaelic literature, on which subjects Pearse was an authority.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 25.—According to a dispatch from Helsingfors, Petrograd now seems doomed to destruction. The evacuation has been prepared and the Bolsheviki are moving everything valuable from private houses, banks, and museums to Moscow or Nahn Novgorod.

The inhabitants are destined to be the victims of gangs of robbers from the jails and Lett deserters, while the interned prisoners will be shot.

PREDICTS GERMAN TRADE IMPERIALISM

French Diplomat Says the Allies Must Take Steps to Thwart It.

NEED A STRONG POLAND

Yet Germans Are Hampering Its Creation—Danger of a Germanized Austria.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—However short the time it may last, and whatever may follow it, the Government now in power in Berlin is seen by the Allies to have a foreign policy sufficiently tangible and definite for other nations to take it into account in formulating their own policies.

This German foreign policy, as defined for me today by a member of the French Foreign Office, is imperialistic, not in a military sense primarily, but economically. It will be a continuing plan, especially if, as is expected in the near future, developments in Berlin bring into power a Government with a large Centre party, the influence of which stands for reforms of internal policy and for imperialism in foreign trade.

Among the immediate means taken to further this policy are the efforts to create a movement in German Austria for annexation to Germany and those to balk the plans of the Allies for establishing a strong Polish State.

"We easily deduct that such is the foreign policy of Germany," said my Foreign Office informant, "from the outstanding facts, and from the utterances of German statesmen. Ebert has said in private conversation, very recently, that Germany must have a policy for compensation in the east and south for her losses in the west. She knows that Alsace-Lorraine and the Sarre Valley are lost in the west, and that nowhere west of the Rhine will she be allowed to maintain any military force in the territory she may hold politically. So it is to the east and south that she looks for annexation and expansion.

"We must have a counter policy to that—I will not say a French, but an allied counter policy, because all the nations in the Peace Conference are in accord as to the end to be attained. The means have not yet been perfected and agreed upon.

Dangers to a Free Poland.

"As to French opinion of what the allied policy should be, it may be stated that something more material than assurances of good will from the Allies is necessary to assure us a strong Poland. She must have economic assistance, perhaps military support.

"The first step has been taken in authorising an allied commission to investigate the whole Polish situation. Pichon is to write instructions for that commission. If it learns that allied troops are indispensable, it is to be hoped that the Allies will agree to send them with as much harmony as they have shown in agreeing to a conference with the Russians at the Princes' Islands.

"In the meantime Germany is going ahead and doing all in her power to impede the creation of a united Polish State. She is doing that to back her foreign policy of economic imperialism for two reasons. In the first place, the loss of Posen and Upper Silesia, with their wheat and coal products, would be a severe blow to Germany. In the second, a firmly constituted Poland would prove a permanent barrier to German expansion to the east.

"Germany is doing very tangible things in this direction, against which we should have assured ourselves before ceasing hostilities on the western front. To the north of Poland Germany is helping the Bolsheviki. To the south she is doing everything possible to embitter the quarrel between the Poles and Ukrainians. That is, she is manoeuvring successfully to keep Poland fully occupied to the north and south, while on the west she is massing her own divisions to hold Posen.

Sees Peril in German Austria.

"As to Germany's policy to the south of her own territory, it is equally a menace to the Allies. She must not be allowed to annex the German part of what was Austria. The Allies can take that stand without violating the principle of self-determination by nationalities. The people of that country do not wish to be part of Germany, but German agents are making headway in propaganda to have it appear so.

The Allies could help themselves in this matter by an early decision as to what should be the total bill that Germany must pay for damages and war indemnities. When that figure is known it is not likely that any part of German Austria will desire to join Germany to be saddled with a big share of her great war bill."

PREMIER PRAISES AMERICA.

British Journalists to Sell Tribute by Lloyd George Here.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—In an autographed message to British newspaper men in support of a Victory Matinée to be given at the London Coliseum on Feb. 2 under the auspices of the National Union of Journalists, Premier Lloyd George writes:

"The British nation is full of admiration and gratitude for the way in which the United States took her part in winning the victory for the freedom of the world and the welfare of mankind. This co-operation has served to give additional and permanent strength to the bonds of friendship and sympathy which exist between the people of the United States and those of the British Empire."

It is proposed by the Journalists' Union to offer the Premier's letter for sale at a New York theatre simultaneously with the sale of an autographed copy of President Wilson's "fourteen points" at the Coliseum here.

OUR ARMY SECOND IN SIZE ON NOV. 11

France Had 2,559,000 Men at Front and America 1,950,000, March Says.

1,718,000 IN BRITISH RANKS

Totals Are of Ration Strength, or Actual Number of Men Who Had to be Fed.

TROOPS IN RUSSIA RETIRE

Americans Suffer 38 Casualties in Skirmish—814,579 Soldiers Have Been Released.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—America had the second largest allied army on the Western front when the armistice was signed, according to announcement made today by General Peyton C. March, Chief of Staff. France stood first with 2,559,000 men, the United States second with 1,950,000 men, and England third with 1,718,000 men, including Portuguese. This is an official statement of the situation, and is quite different from predictions made a year ago by German military critics that in any event the United States would not be able to place more than 600,000 men in Europe.

"We now have fairly complete reports of the strength of the allied forces on the western front at the time of the armistice," said General March, "and we find from these reports that the United States force had passed the force of Great Britain in strength, and was the second force in strength on Nov. 11. These figures, which I am going to give you are the 'ration strength,' meaning they include every man who had to be fed—combatant, noncombatant, medical men, services of supply men, &c.

"The French on Nov. 11 had 2,559,000; the United States on Nov. 11 had 1,950,000 on the western front; the British, including the Portuguese, who were serving with them, 1,718,000; and the Belgian and Italian forces, on the western front, amounting to about 200,000."

General March made public official information just received from Archangel showing the American troops on that front have been forced by Bolshevist attacks to retire and take up a new position.

Retirement in Russia.

"We have reports from Archangel," said General March, "which were received here on Jan. 24 and have been decoded. We had at Shenkursk a force which, at last reports, consisted of a detachment of British, two American companies, and two Russian companies. Manifestly this force has had out in that vicinity small patrols at times. The towns mentioned in the report are so small that we cannot find them on our largest maps. The force at Shenkursk was attacked on three sides, and the report which was received at Archangel that day stated that they were forced to evacuate.

"The troops at a place called Ust-Pedenga, which I cannot find on the map, were also compelled to evacuate under attacks by strong Bolshevist forces. Our troops took up a position midway between Shenkursk and Ust-Pedenga. Under attacks of 1,000 of enemy troops we retreated from Tania to a point ten miles away therefrom. Tana is eighteen miles west of Shenkursk.

"Under an attack from 200 of the enemy forces we retreated from Kodema, which is twenty-five miles from Shenkursk, to a point within thirteen miles of that town. The enemy has strong patrols from Shegovari to Tania. Shegovari is twenty miles north of Tania and to the right of Shenkursk.

"The Americans lost ten enlisted men killed in action, seventeen wounded, and eleven missing in the retirement. Near Ust-Pedenga, and later at Shegovari, an enemy attack on the west was repulsed."

"Do we plan," was asked, "to reinforce the American unit in Russia in view of the fact that it seems to be retiring?"

"Shenkursk," replied General March, "as scaled on the map, is apparently 100 miles from Archangel, and the allied forces representing four governments, and the Russians, five governments, have up there a force large enough to reinforce these men or have them fall back on them and hold the situation."

Marshal Foch in Command.

General March was asked whether any recommendation has been received concerning the withdrawal of the American forces from the Archangel front.

"The force now at Archangel," he said, "was put in there by the allied governments on the recommendation of Marshal Foch, and the military handling of that unit was thereupon turned over to the Supreme Commander; and whatever is done concerning reinforcing the unit will be done by him. The Allies agreed upon a British Commander in Chief, and at the last reports he was in the front lines inspecting his troops, and I assume that the military part of it is in hand."

When General March was asked whether anything had been received indicating when General Pershing would return to the United States, he said:

"We have nothing on that rumor. Of course, if General Pershing wants to come back and asks the War Department his request will be approved at once, but as far we have not been notified by General Pershing that he has any desire to come home."

General March was asked how many German ships would be available for use by the United States under the new arrangement.

"Mr. Hurley," he replied, "cabled the Secretary of War to the effect that negotiations were proceeding very favorably, and that he would be able in a day or two to report just what ships would be available."

Concerning the process of demobilization, General March said:

"The discharge of officers and men has been proceeding during the last week so that on Jan. 24 57,866 officers and 858,187 men were discharged. These figures include incomplete reports for the past week which are supposed to get in complete tonight. There have been ordered for discharge in classes which I will give to the stenographer 1,300,000. The British demobilization has been speeded up, and from Nov. 11 to Jan. 19 12,759 officers and in all other ranks 511,950 were discharged."

Were French Fourrager.

It was pointed out to General March that a report from abroad stated that many of the American soldiers in Europe, including officers, are wearing decorations to which they are not entitled, sometimes unknowingly on their part. When asked whether there had been any complaint about that he replied:

"There was a statement made to me within the last two days that some American enlisted man had been seen on the street wearing a French fourrager. It later developed that he was a marine. This particular decoration, according to the French military attaché, is only given to units which have been cited six times, and there are only a very limited number of people in the world who are entitled to wear this. Inasmuch as the man was not a member of the army we suggested that the matter be taken up with the head of the Marine Corps, and that is the only case which has been brought to my attention.

"The nonreceipt of mail from the American Expeditionary Force," continued General March, "has been a subject of comment, and after some correspondence with General Pershing, he has had printed a number of postcards so that one can be put into the hands of every single member of the A. E. F.—officers and men—with orders to send it home to his nearest relative. On the card will be a statement as to where the man or officer is, his condition as to health, &c., and we hope that if we can't persuade the members of the A. E. F. to write long letters home we will at least be able to get some information in the hands of every relative in the United States, if it can be done.

"Some misunderstanding of an order that has been issued by the War Department concerning the divisional insignia which are worn on the sleeves of men who have served with dividions in France has arisen. These insignia are very different in character, and the Department has taken the ground that every man who belongs to a division which is to be demobilized, whether he comes over individually or whether he comes across with his division, will be allowed to retain the insignia which he wore in France to indicate the division to which he belonged.

Retention of Insignia.

"The order as issued said that these men would be allowed to retain such insignia up to the time of their demobilization for the reason that the War Department has no control over them after demobilization. When they are discharged they become civilians, and can wear the uniform by law, and can wear anything on it they please, so the idea of the Department was not to prohibit the use of these division insignia after the men get out of the service, but the phraseology was simply misunderstood because the question was also up as to whether regular officers and soldiers who return to their own units should keep on wearing the insignia.

"This was decided by saying that such people when they returned to their own units should wear the regular army uniform, but all divisions raised from the National Guard or National Army will be allowed to retain their insignia.

"The War Department during the week has suspended the war limits of punishment for officers and enlisted men serving at home. During the war sentences of great severity were imposed for serious offenses like desertion or absence without leave. Conditions in the United States having returned practically to normal we have stopped in the United States and the Philippine Islands war punishment for military offenses.

"This merely means that we are reverting the United States proper and the Philippines to the general order which the President issued before the war in which he indicated the maximum limits of punishment in times of peace. Conditions in Archangel, Siberia, and in France where we still have an Army of Occupation, are wartime conditions and this does not apply to them. And, of course, this does not apply to persons who are serving sentences at the present time. The only way in which a man can be affected whose sentence has been approved is by the exercise of clemency by the President.

"There has been prepared in the War Department for many weeks a weekly summary of important activities which has been substantially what we have given the House and Senate Military Affairs Committees every week since my return from France. It has occurred to me that some of the correspondents would like to have facts upon which to base their stories, and I have no objection at any time to turn over to him this confidential information. I mean give him these charts of activities, &c., which are gotten up for my information and the information of the Secretary of War. These may be obtained on my order, and if any correspondent wishes them I would gladly let him have any order upon application."

PARIS CAR STRIKE IS QUICKLY ENDED

Government Takes Over Subway, 'Bus, and Other Lines, and Men Go Back to Work.

GENERAL TIEUP ON FRIDAY

Hundreds of Thousands Forced to Walk—Hints of Bolshevism Causing the Trouble.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The strike on the transportation lines of Paris came to an end today when the employes of the various companies, after the Government had announced it would requisition transport facilities, decided to go back to work.

The Government, in requisitioning the subway, street car, and automobile 'bus systems, announced that it was impossible to admit even the temporary suspension of transportation facilities in the capital.

At a meeting this afternoon the employes of the subway and street railway companies adopted a resolution declaring they had decided "to respond to the requisition, it being understood that negotiations will be opened immediately with the companies, or the Government, which has substituted itself for them."

The union leaders declared the employes were ready to answer any appeal made to them. Work was resumed progressively this afternoon, and normal conditions will obtain on Sunday.

M. Raoul, Secretary of the Metropolitan Subway Employes' Union, speaking at the meeting of the employes this morning, said:

"You have driven the companies to a regime of requisition which is no cause for rejoicing on the part of the companies. The negotiations will continue under new conditions, under the aegis of governmental arbitration which gives you a solid guarantee. It is to your interest to resume work, leaving it to your delegates to continue the negotiations under conditions which represent for you a brilliant victory."

Up to the time the Government took its action there had been no material change in the strike situation. Some trains were running on the subway and reduced service had been promised for some of the street car and bus lines. Several American ambulances were seen carrying passengers.

Strike Came Suddenly Friday.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—In the small hours this morning 3,000 subway employes decided by a practically unanimous vote to join the strike voted at 1:30 A. M. by the Omnibus Street Car Federation.

The suddenness of the move and the fact that the transportation services should have begun to function at 5 A. M. rendered it impossible for the employers to take measures to maintain the service today. The utmost that could be done was to warn the police and insure protection of the subway stations and street car depots by armed guards. But hundreds of thousands of Paris workers were compelled to traverse on foot the two or three miles separating the suburbs from the centre of the city. Toward 10 o'clock it was possible to reopen a considerably reduced service on several street car lines and on two auto bus routes, all vehicles bearing two armed policemen, one beside the driver and the other on the rear platform.

There naturally was a rush for the cars at the starting points, and the sight of the crowded cars stopping only at important junction points only served to exasperate the walking multitude, which until then had accepted the situation with proverbial Parisian good humor.

The men's representatives declared that their demands—which include an extra two francs in addition to the five already accorded to meet the increased cost of living, a higher pension, shorter hours and certain reforms on the subject of permanency of individual positions—were more than justified. They cited cases of men earning 11 to 14 francs for ten or even eleven hours' work per diem, on which at the present scale of prices it is simply impossible to nourish and clothe a family of four persons. The street car and omnibus employes in particular complained that the employers had shown an intention of taking advantage of the flood of cheaper labor released by the army demobilization.

The real significance of the movement appears to be that it is an expression of fear that the employers may use the demobilization as a weapon against the labor organizations. The men imagined they saw danger coming and declared the sudden strike to anticipate and avert it.

Hints of Bolshevism.

There is grave anxiety about the intentions of the aviation workers. Strikes have been more or less sporadic in the aviation factories ever since Loucheur crushed the big organized movement by a threat to militarize the whole industry. One of the principal employers said he regarded the situation as highly serious, and, indeed, hardly concealed his expectation that a general aviation strike was little more than a matter of hours.

Numerous inquiries were made today as to the possibility that anything in the nature of Bolshevist action was underlying the whole trouble. There are ominous whispers to that effect in many directions, but so far nothing tangible has developed. At the same time it is known that there has been a great deal of underground propaganda of a Bolshevist character among the workers both in Paris and throughout the industrial regions of the Rhone Valley, and it cannot be doubted that a very extensive organization which fomented both the civil and military troubles in the early Summer of 1917 was only scotched and not killed by the removal of those comparatively few of its leaders who were caught and brought to justice.

In well-informed circles the possibility of concerted underground wirepulling is regarded as the gravest feature of the situation. But confidence in Clemenceau is very great and it is pointed out that no such movement can become really harmful if opposed with firmness from the outset.

The French public certainly has no sympathy with Bolshevism, and the example of Berlin is quoted as proof both of the danger in vacillation instead of action and the success of strong measures even after the Bolshevist movement gained full headway. The mass of the Parisian public has as yet little inkling or thought of the factors that may underlie the strike. Everyone has had such thorough proof of the present cost of living that there is a general inclination to agree with any demand for a raise in wages. Travelers on the subways—into which they are jammed at rush hours in a manner that would startle even New York—cannot understand how the companies are not making huge profits under the present system of greatly reduced number of trains and a big percentage of female labor, whose wage rates are still barely equivalent to that paid to males before the war, and the earlier closing hours which obviate service at a time when passengers are least numerous. It may therefore be said that despite the inconvenience the public sympathy is mostly on the side of the employes.

MILITARY POLICE IN RAID.

Racing Charts, Poker Chips, and 7 Prisoners Taken Near Belmont Park

MINEOLA, L. I., Jan. 25.—One of the most spectacular raids in Nassau County in years took place this afternoon when fifteen heavily armed members of the military police and some of Nassau County's detectives, headed by District Attorney Charles R. Weeks and Captain Louis H. Bulsch of the military police at Camp Mills, swooped down upon an alleged gambling establishment on the Floral Park Road, opposite the Belmont Park race track. There were about 125 men in large rooms in the hotel, according to the raiders, who confiscated racing charts, poker chips, and a dozen telephones, the latter found in a smaller room upstairs. Seven of the men were later held in $1,000 bail each by Justice of the Peace Neu, at Lynbrook, charged with maintaining a gambling establishment.

They gave their names as Jacob Straus, alleged proprietor of the place, John Willis, John Raymond, John Delalong, Abram Jacobs, Walter Higgins and Harry Ohwein. They pleaded not guilty and their examinations were fixed for Saturday next.

District Attorney Weeks said he had received numerous complaints of a pool room near the Belmont track and he had Detective John Pringle and his men investigate.

Captain Bulsch said he had been told that soldiers had been playing the races somewhere in Nassau County, and after a consultation with the District Attorney it was decided to raid the hotel yesterday afternoon. No soldiers were found in the place, according to the District Attorney and Captain Bulsch.

SEEK TO INSTALL STATE SOCIALISM

have succeeded in amending the State Constitution in such a manner that the State or any political subdivision may engage in it and all kinds of private enterprise of employment. Also, another amendment permits issuance of State bonds up to $10,000,000 for the establishment of its industries, while additional bonds may be issued when secured by real estate mortgages. This last provision is aimed to permit the establishment of a system of rural credit directed and operated by the State.

An Industrial Commission.

The league has introduced a bill which creates an industrial commission of three members—the Governor, the Attorney General, and the Commissioner of Agriculture and Labor. By giving the Governor veto power, the Governor is, in effect, the whole commission, for nothing ordered or done by the other two commission members is binding until approved by the Governor. This commission is authorized to conduct and operate any and all industrial enterprises the State may establish. Its appointees as head of the proposed State Bank and as Director of the proposed elevator and milling interests may be removed with or without cause at any time.

The State Bank scheme is regarded as the pivotal measure. Without the bank, which is to be capitalized at $2,000,000, the funds being obtained by the issuance of State bonds, the Nonpartisan League President, A. C. Townley, says it would be impossible to carry the program to completion. By virtue of his power on the Industrial Board, the Governor would locate such bank, name all its officers, and direct its every activity.

Under the Banking bill introduced all public moneys are required to be deposited in the State Bank. This constitutes a fund of about $25,000,000, collected in taxes each year, while control of many millions more in the State Board of School and University Land fund, created by land grants from the Government and established for the benefit of schools and higher institutions, will pass to the bank. It also is proposed to force into the State Bank about $40,000,000 carried by State banks in the form of reserves in Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Chicago banks.

Deposits from private parties may also be received, and as an inducement for such deposits provision is made that deposits in the State Bank shall be free from taxation.

The $2,000,000 issue authorized for the bank capital is placed in the hands of the Industrial Commission, to be sold in amounts from $5 to $10,000. The bond issue specifically provides that the bank may purchase out of its own deposits the bonds which make up its capital stock.

The privilege of making loans to the State Industrial Commission is given to the bank, likewise power to transfer moneys from one fund to another, the occasion may arise. The bank also would conduct a rural credits department by issuing bonds against real estate mortgages, this department to operate somewhat along the plan of the Federal Farm Loan Bank.

Elevators and Flour Mills.

With their bank in operation, the nonpartisans would begin the establishment of their terminal elevator and flour mill scheme. This provides for a $5,000,000 bond issue, the bonds to be sold by the State Industrial Commission. All powers with respect to the establishment and operation of the system are placed in the hands of the Industrial Commission, while the Governor, with the powers granted him, becomes the actual directing head of the system. The commission would locate elevators and mills at its own discretion, no legislative interference being anticipated on that point.

The only bill so far introduced directly authorizing a bond issue is that covering the capital stock of the bank. That bill provides that such bonds, with interest, are to be paid from the profits of the bank, with a further provision for an elaborate scheme of State taxation by which to raise the necessary funds if the bank profits should fail to come up to expectations.

Another industrial bill that will be introduced will relate to the lignite mine problem. It is proposed that the State shall ultimately engage in the mining business on an extensive scale, but preliminary to this it is proposed to make investigations of the commercial possibilities in the lignite coal business.

To carry this program into effect will require about 50 per cent. more revenue for State purposes than has formerly been collected. This will be obtained under the Administration plan, by the enactment of an income tax on a graduated basis, by which earned incomes of $10,000 would be subject to a 6 per cent. tax, while "unearned" incomes, which means incomes received from stocks, bonds, mortgages, &c., would bear a 10 per cent. tax. The tax begins at $1,000 incomes for single men and $2,000 for married men. A straight income tax on corporations of 3 per cent. is contemplated.

Another bill is the Excise Corporation tax, while still another contemplates a direct tax of 50 cents on each $1,000 unit value of corporation stock.

Tax on Sound Speculation.

To force idle land into crops, it is proposed to assess them on the basis of 100 per cent. of their actual value, while railroads and public utilities corporations would take the same rate. Land that is cropped would be assessed at 50 per cent. of its actual value. The nonpartisans believe that this system of taxation would force land out of the hands of the speculators and into the hands of actual farmers, as the tax would be such a heavy penalty as to make it unprofitable to hold land out of cultivation.

The theory of the single tax is also worked out by the exemption from taxation of all improvements on agricultural lands, while in cities it is proposed to exempt from taxation improvements worth up to $2,500, provided that the total value of such improvements does not exceed $5,000. If they exceed $5,000 value the owner must pay tax on the entire property.

To place the taxing machinery directly in the hands of the Governor, in accordance with the Socialist theories of President A. C. Townley and his adviser, Walter Thomas Mills, who is here from Texas, the Tax Commission of three members is abolished, and a single Tax Commissioner substituted, that officer to be subject to removal at the will of the Governor.

Gross income taxes on railroads, oil line companies, &c., also are contemplated, while a registration tax on mortgage filings is proposed in addition.

The Non-Partisan League program is being worked out by the caucus system. Members of the Legislature elected as non-partisans entered the caucus bound to carry out its orders. In the caucus, which is secret, Townley and Mills have outlined their program, and it has the caucus approval.

A Workmen's Compensation act, the creation of a State Insurance Department, in which the State would carry its own insurance on public buildings; a Coal Mine Inspection act, and numerous similar measures, are contemplated by the Administration.

WAR AGENCY TO DISBAND.

Protective League Division Here Will Break Up Feb. 1.

The New York Division of the American Protective League, a volunteer organization which aided the Federal Department of Justice in combating enemy propaganda, will disband on Feb. 1, the event being marked by a dinner next Friday night at the Hotel Astor. According to an announcement made last night, the New York section investigated more than 90,000 cases with a staff of about 4,500 men, many of them well-known business men, but whose names never were connected with any Government investigation.

The league itself had more than 250,000 members when the armistice was signed, each working without pay and meeting his own expenses. The clerical work incident to the investigations was borne by the members jointly, this item in the New York Division running up to $80,000, it was said. The local work was in charge of Chief E. H. Rushmore.

ANTI-DRYS ORGANIZE FORCES FOR ACTION

Plan to Perfect National Association Regardless of Result at Albany.

SOLDIERS ASK FOR FREEDOM

Farmers Inquire How Revenue Will Be Made Up and If Farms Will Be Taxed.

The Association Opposed to National Prohibition was busy yesterday with plans to defeat the Anti-Saloon League in its efforts to bring about the ratification of the Federal prohibition amendment by the State Senate at Albany next Tuesday. The officers and members of the new organization frankly admit that they have not had experience with State Legislatures as the officers and agents of the league have had, and that they are watching the movements of William H. Anderson, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, and his associates very carefully. Furthermore, the new association, they say, has not a great deal of money for perfectly legitimate campaign expenses, while, its officers understand, the coffers of the league are full. The lineup at Albany a day or two ago indicated that only one vote was needed to effect ratification by the Senate.

But no matter what happens at Albany on Tuesday, the new association will go right ahead in perfecting its national organization, according to Frank A. K. Boland, its general counsel. Indeed, Mr. Boland said yesterday, the association could do nothing else, in view of the thousands who have rallied to its support and have asked to be enrolled in its membership. Besides letters offering all sorts of suggestions and apport, there were received at the association's headquarters in the Cambridge Building, Thirty-third Street and Fifth Avenue, yesterday petitions of protest against the methods used in bringing about the ratification of the amendment containing more than 25,000 signatures.

Yesterday, for the first time, the association heard to large number from returned soldiers of the American Expeditionary Force. Every soldier who wrote asked permission to join the organization. They contrasted conditions in England and in France with the threatened condition here, and, as one put it, "It's all well enough to talk about freedom of the seas and get you to fight, but what about the personal liberty of those who did the fighting when they get home!"

Soldier Denounces Prohibition.

A Brooklyn soldier wrote: "I volunteered my services as a soldier for Uncle Sam to help 'make the world safe for democracy' and freedom. Am I now to sit idly by and permit freedom to be denied me? I hope not. I know that this amendment, if it becomes a part of the Constitution, is but the forerunner of other laws that will deprive us of the one thing that has made this country as great as it is—freedom. Take that away, and what is left for us to boast of and fight for? Nothing."

The association is beginning to hear also from the farmers. The chief executives of many State granges have written to James Wood, Chairman of the association, asking for some estimate of the amount of revenue that will be lost to the Government from the several States in which the granges are located, if there shall be nation-wide prohibition, and if that revenue will have to be made up by additional taxes on farm lands. Mr. Woods said yesterday that the association had not anticipated such inquiries, and had not established a tax accounting department, but the letters suggested the need of both and that if many more such questions come in, there will be a sufficient force to answer them. In the cases of the letters received, he said, accurate information as to the tax situation in the States from which the communications came would be obtained and forwarded to the writers.

In the course of a statement given out last night by William H. Hirst, attorney for the New York Brewers' Association, and counsel for the Society of Restaurateurs of New York, he said:

> The Senate will do the people of New State a great disfavor and grievous wrong if it concurs in the action of the Assembly on the National Prohibition Amendment. Ratification means that the State abandons its sovereignty and surrenders its police power in a most vital matter. It institutes an opening wedge for the ultimate destruction of the Federal system of Government. The people of New York State voted against just that thing last election. The fact that enough States are reported to have ratified the Amendment to put it into effect makes rejection of it by New York State all the more imperative. This is so in order to reserve to the State a position of advantage, consistency and strength when the time comes, as it surely will, that its people will appeal to the United States Supreme Court to upset and rescind the unconstitutional and unwarranted interference by other States with the internal police affairs of New York State.

William H. Anderson issued the following statement last night:

> The statement emanating from Albany to the effect that the Anti-Saloon League was surprised by the proposal to make the Excise Commissioner the official to enforce the prohibition law is a mistake. The Anti-Saloon League never had any intention except to turn the excise department into a prohibition department and to make the Excise Commissioner the Commissioner of Prohibition. This plan was originated by the Anti-Saloon League a year ago in the emergency Prohibition bill then proposed, and this is the plan being followed by the National League, which is proposing to put national enforcement under the jurisdiction of the Internal Revenue Commissioner, who occupies a position corresponding to that of the Excise Commissioner in this State. The league believes that the Excise Commissioner's department has been honestly and efficiently administered and that it would be foolish to undertake to build up a new department when there was already in existence something with experience, personnel, and equipment that can readily be converted to the new use. The Anti-Saloon League will not put anything in the way of any legislative plan for enforcement, providing the Commissioner is given an adequate law and sufficient power and assistance to enforce it.

TELLS OF FALSE DIAGNOSES.

Dr. Jackson Says Foreign Substances Often Mislead Physicians.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 25.—Many physicians were misled by the presence of unsuspected foreign substances in lung cavities and rushed patients to California and other distant places to recover from purely imaginary tuberculosis, declared Dr. Chevalier Q. Jackson of Pittsburgh in an address today before the American Röntgen Ray Society at the Hotel Traymore. He advocated that persons believed to have bronchial affections should submit to the Röntgen ray at least once a year.

In a résumé of doctors' errors, Dr. Jackson told of the discovery of an inverted staple in a man who had been under treatment for tuberculosis for eighteen months, and of the finding of the top of an atomizer in a patient who had spent much time in California. He said that the rays had discovered an umbrella tip in the body of a daughter of a physician after the girl had been an invalid for six years, of the location of a six-penny nail which caused "unmistakable symptoms" of tuberculosis, and of the finding of tacks which also confused the diagnosticians.

Dr. Charles A. Waters, United States Army Medical Corps, declared that thousands of American soldiers had been saved in France by the use of the most modern methods of locating bullets and shell splinters. He declared that speed by the American surgeons also saved many lives and that when the Marines stopped the Germans at Chateau-Thierry, the American surgeons passed wounded at the rate of one every day.

DENIES GALVESTON FLED.

Daniels Issues Statement on Torpedoing of the Ticonderoga.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Secretary Daniels today issued a statement dealing with the manner in which the transport Ticonderoga was left to her fate by the cruiser Galveston, which The Providence Journal alleged, ran away when a submarine attacked the Ticonderoga. The statement, based on the report made by the commanding officer of the Galveston, follows:

"On the morning of Sept. 30, 1918, the U. S. S. Galveston was acting as escort for a convoy of about fourteen vessels bound for England.

"The convoy was about 1,400 miles off the English coast, the Galveston at that time being ahead and on the right flank of the convoy and the course being about northeast. An army cargo ship, Feltore, was known to be about two miles south of the convoy.

"A short time before daylight, about 5 A. M., the Galveston saw a gun flash on the starboard bow distant about five or six miles. She changed course and ran toward the flash and opened fire with five-inch gun. It was thought at first that the Feltore was being attacked, but this soon proved to be not so. A few minutes after opening fire the Galveston saw a second set of gun flashes, which were very close together and made it dangerous to continue firing, due to the possibility of hitting a friendly vessel, and immediately after cessation of the gun flashes the Galveston ceased firing.

"The Galveston did not know that the Ticonderoga had fallen out of convoy and supposed that the vessel attacked was probably a westbound empty merchant vessel. It was noticed that a fire broke out on the vessel, but it appeared that the fire was soon extinguished. The Galveston returned to her position with the convoy and after checking up the ships it was found that the Ticonderoga was missing and it was then supposed that the attack had been made on the Ticonderoga.

"The commanding officer states that due to the large number of men in the engineer's force who were sick with influenza it had been necessary to reduce his boiler power, and if he remained absent from the convoy any great length of time he would be unable to rejoin, and the submarine would, therefore, have good opportunity of attacking the other vessels of the convoy; that he did not know the ship attacked was from his convoy, and that it was his first duty to remain with the large number of ships in the convoy rather than to remain longer with the ship being attacked, and that he thought to proceed with her convoy.'

"The commanding officer states that his general instructions were that 'if one or more ships in convoy are torpedoed or mined the "Ocean Escort" is to precede with her convoy.'

"The reports from the survivors of the Ticonderoga state that during the night of Sept. 29 and 30, the Ticonderoga had fallen out of her position in the convoy, due to difficulty in maintaining steam sufficient to keep up her speed.

"A court of inquiry is in session to investigate occurrences on the Ticonderoga."

THRONG HEARS MAX ROSEN.

Violinist Charms in Playing of Little Pieces Touched with Sentiment.

Max Rosen, the violinist, whose romantic career here and abroad, no less than his fine sense of beauty in music, invites popular interest wherever he has appeared, drew another of his great audiences at his first recital of the season last evening in Carnegie Hall, where he had to add many encores to his program. He had for his more exacting and technical numbers two concertos by Nardini and Paganini, with Emanuel Balaban at the piano, and later Leopold Auer's difficult concert tarantelle.

The audience took pleasure in little pieces touched with sentiment or story, such as the Schumann-Auer "Bird as Prophet," Kreisler's "Tambourin Chinois," Godowsky's "Legende," and Cotenet's "Chanson Meditation," and at the end the crowd still asked for more.

ARGENTINE JEWS PROTEST.

Complain of Persecution During Outbreak and Ask Protection.

BUENOS AIRES, Jan. 25.—A large group of representative Israelites visited President Irigoyen today to protest against the treatment of Jews. The Grand Rabbi, in an address to the President, said:

"During the recent disturbance Jews were the victims of unjust atrocities and inexcusable insults. Under the suspicion that some Russians were among the agitators the entire Jewish population, without distinction as to age or sex, were persecuted and maltreated, without the slightest respect even toward women, children, or the aged, leaving an adverse and hostile atmosphere against the entire Jewish population throughout the republic, which still exposes us to new attacks and reprisals at any moment under any pretext."

The rabbi begged for the punishment of those responsible and pleaded for justice for "an important portion of the population, which is peaceful and industrious and has always contributed to the moral and economic progress of the republic." He asked that special precautions be taken to protect Jews in the provinces where persecutions are reported, and this President Irigoyen promised.

For the last two days the Chamber of Deputies has devoted its sessions to a discussion of the recent anti-Jewish outbreak, demanding an explanation from the Government as to just what happened, how many victims there were and why there was so much silence and mystery. It was charged in the Chamber that the Jews had been persecuted and that innocent persons had suffered.

As indicative of the feeling here, a rabbi today was followed for several blocks through the business district by a crowd of hooting and jeering boys. Many other persons jeered the rabbi from doors and windows as he passed.

URGES INTERALLIED FARMING COUNCIL

Commission Appointed by Secretary Houston Sums Up Investigation of Conditions Abroad.

ALL IN NEED OF SUPPLIES

Meat, Dairy Products, Wheat, and Fertilizer Will Have to be Imported for Some Time to Come.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The creation of an interallied agricultural council, of which the American member should be the Secretary, is recommended in the special report of the American Agricultural Commission to Europe, made public by Secretary Houston tonight. This commission was appointed last August by Secretary Houston and was sent to Europe to study conditions in England, France, and Italy.

Its members are Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Carl A. Vrooman, President R. A. Pearson of the Iowa State College of Agriculture, Chief W. A. Taylor of the Bureau of Plant Industry; Chief George M. Rommel of the Division of Animal Husbandry; Dean Thomas F. Hunt of the University of California College of Agriculture; David R. Coker, a cotton grower from South Carolina; George R. Argo of the Government Bureau of Markets, and President W. O. Thompson of the Ohio State University.

Before the war, the commission says, France was producing 800,000 tons of sugar and consuming 600,000 tons. She was able to export one-fourth of her sugar crop. Since the war beet sugar production in France has been reduced to practically nothing, and the present production of France runs to 250,000 tons. In addition to this, the commission reports, 80 per cent. of the French sugar factories have been utterly destroyed by military invasion, and reconstruction of this area presents a most serious problem.

Some of the outstanding facts presented by the report made public tonight are:

"Great Britain's war agriculture in 1918 increased her home-grown bread supplies fourfold. The reports for the harvest of 1918 indicate that in the matter of breadstuffs England could supply herself forty weeks of the year as against ten weeks in 1916. The acreage of tillable land for wheat, barley, oats, rye, and other cereals was increased by almost 2,000,000 acres.

"In England and Wales there was broken up not far from 2,500,000 acres of permanent grass land as a war measure. Including Ireland and Scotland the total area thus plowed up was approximately 4,000,000 acres. The effect of this was to increase food for home consumption and decrease the demand for tonnage. Both of these were important factors in the war program.

"In Italy there has been some reduction of the cultivated area, but except for wheat the reduction in the volume of breadstuffs has not been very serious. The yield per acre also has decreased, the two chief direct causes being shortage of fertilizer and uncontrolled growth of weeds. Italy's wheat production in 1918 was estimated at 43,000,000 quintals, compared with 46,153,000 quintals in 1914.

British Cattle Stock Maintained.

"Great Britain has maintained her herds of cattle and has increased her sheep and made small losses in hogs. All cattle in 1918 numbered 12,184,500, and in 1917, 12,382,236; horses declined more than 900,000. Horses in 1914 were 2,227,182 and in 1917, 2,180,318. Complete figures for 1918 were not available, but so far as ascertained they did not indivate material variation from the figures of 1917.

In France all live stock declined. The comparative figures on Dec. 31, 1913, and on June 30, 1917, are as follows:

Cattle	14,787,710	12,443,304
Sheep	16,131,390	10,586,594
Hogs	7,035,850	4,200,280
Horses	3,231,000	2,288,000

"However, France has maintained her young cattle. Her 'breeders' over one year, in 1913, numbered 2,853,650, and under one year, 2,112,440. The same classes in 1917 were 2,677,870 and 2,016,880. The decline in sheep is most serious while there is a sharp decline in hogs. Sufficient supplies of breeding stock will probably remain in any event to permit fairly rapid replacement after the war.

"Italy's cattle have declined from 7,100,000 in 1914 to 6,135,410 in 1918, but her calves have increased from 1,600,000 in 1914 to 1,801,808 in 1918. Many orders have been in effect for the purpose of conserving live stock. For example, in some sections calves weighing less than 440 pounds could not be slaughtered. Similar restrictions were applied to the slaughtering of sheep and hogs. Italy's present estimated needs are 1,000,000 cows and 500,000 oxen.

Seed Situation Acute.

"Generally speaking, Great Britain, France, and Italy will need to import for some time to come large supplies of meats, fats, dairy products and concentrates for animals. Some importations of live stock for breeding purposes may be made, but for the most part importations will consist of live stock products. In France and Italy the preservation of young animals gives promise of comparatively early restoration of both dairy and beef herds, and the general thought of producers there is that their present basic stock is the best adapted for their purposes.

"At the time of the commission's observations the seed situation for 1919 appeared to be very acute, both as to supply and effective distribution. This situation perhaps will be intensified as to supply by the demands of the devastated regions which are now released for normal activities, but distribution will perhaps be considerably improved.

"Unless, through prompt international action, the approximate stocks and requirements of the vitally important seeds for each country can be determined as a basis for the administration of the existing export restricting regulations in force in the several countries with respect to seeds, the prospect for prompt restoration of normal production in several of the countries will be seriously impaired. The existing conditions tend to favor the forcing of seed prices to destructive high points and thus to endanger the welfare of our own farmers as well as thousands of the allied countries.

"In addition to the live stock products already mentioned, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium will need to import for some time to come large supplies of wheat, fertilizers, fibers, (wool and cotton,) and farm machinery. All countries under review have made marked progress in the utilization of farm machinery, especially in the use of tractors."

TO KEEP PROMISE TO FARMER

Houston Says Nation Will Make Good on Price Guaranteed for Wheat

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 25.—David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, in explaining why the Government is not urging farmers to plant larger crops of wheat next Spring, despite representation of the urgent need abroad, pointed out today that crops planted in the Spring will not be available for the market until next Fall, when food conditions will be changed.

"The farmers planted last Fall 7,000,000 more acres of wheat than they did at any previous time, and the indications are that the Spring plant will be on a very large scale," he said. "The question is, can the crop be disposed of at the guaranteed price of $2.26 a bushel on No. 1 Winter wheat?

"The prospects are that the yield will be at least 1,000,000,000 bushels, of which amount about 650,000,000 will be used at home. Will Europe take the surplus after a season of producing on her own account, and with Australia and Argentina in the market? Australia has been guaranteed $1.18 for its output and of course the European nations will seek their supply where they can get it at the lowest price.

"The United States Government has made the guarantee and will make it good. It will pay the farmer the difference between $2.26 and the figure at which he has to sell his surplus."

Secretary Houston is stopping here on his way to Washington from Denver, where he attended the National Association of Livestock Men's Convention.

Send Punch Bowl to British.

Officers of the machine gun training centre at Camp Hancock, Ga., are sending a $1,500 silver punch bowl to the English machine gun camp at Grantham, England, in appreciation of their assistance in the development of the American centre. Between June, 1918, and this month, twenty-five English officers have been at Camp Hancock as instructors. General Oliver E. Edwards, commanding officer of the Georgia camp, has assigned Lieutenant Stanley P. Brewster of Cincinnati to present the trophy. He will sail tomorrow on the George Washington.

ARMOUR ADMITS LEGISLATIVE FUND

Formed by "Big Five" Packers to Protect Their Interests Before Congress.

FAVORS A MEAT MONOPOLY

Under Government Regulation, He Says, Prices to Consumers Would Come Down.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—J. Ogden Armour, head of Armour & Co., testified before the Senate Agriculture Committee today that the "Big Five" packers—Armour, Swift, Wilson, Morris and Cudahy—had created a fund to look after the packers' interests in Congressional and other legislation. He regarded this, he said, as a legitimate means of protection against unfair lawmaking.

The "Big Five," Mr. Armour said, engaged George L. McCarthy, General Manager of The National Provisioner, a packing trade paper, in 1916, at a "secret salary" of $5,000. J. Francis Heney, special investigator for the Federal Trade Commission, who drew the admission from Mr. Armour relating to the legislative fund, asked the witness if Mr. McCarthy was not engaged at the time the Borland resolution providing for an investigation of the packers by the commission was pending in the House.

"I believe the Borland resolution was up that year," said Mr. Armour.

"Did not an agreement exist among the five big packers jointly to bear the expenses of fighting legislation relating to the packers?" asked Mr. Heney.

"I know of no agreement," replied Mr. Armour. "But we did join in to protect ourselves in the interests of the industry, just as any other industry might do."

It was brought out that Henry Veeder, counsel for the packers, usually looked after legislative matters. The expense of watching legislation was apportioned among the five firms, Mr. Armour said, approximately as follows: Swift & Co., 36.75 per cent.; Armour & Co., 29.93 per cent.; Morris & Co., 14.32 per cent.; Cudahy & Co., 10 per cent.; Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company, 10 per cent.

McCarthy "Earned His Salary."

Mr. Heney read letters showing that Mr. McCarthy had consulted the five packing firms as to which of the independent packers should be recommended to Food Administrator Hoover for appointment to the Food Administration in the regulation of the packing industry. In one letter Mr. Veeder wrote that there was "no question that Mr. McCarthy has earned his salary." That Mr. Heney said, was written about the time the Borland resolution was killed in the House.

Mr. Armour admitted, under cross-examination, that the "big five" packers clubbed together on expenses at the time the famous "Veeder pool" was dissolved in 1898, after the Government had started to proceed against it. This pool, Mr. Armour said, was formed to control the supply of live cattle arriving at the stockyards, so as to prevent a break in market prices of meat. Mr. Veeder, he said, organized the pool. It was dissolved a month before an injunction was issued against it.

Mr. Armour, under questioning, told the committee how the five packers had taken up with Mr. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. the project for a loan, first of $90,000,000 and later of $60,000,000 to merge the companies.

"Why was this attempted?" asked Mr. Heney.

"So as to get the entire packing house industry into one corporation," replied the packer.

"What advantage would there be in that?"

"It would have enabled the packers to maintain fair prices with the cattle raisers and to the consumer," the witness replied. "The packers occupy a middle position between the two. The packers, like every one else, want to make a reasonable profit. By getting together it would enable them to do away with duplication of activity. For instance, it would be possible to abolish many storage warehouses, and there would be a saving of salesmen and of delivery expenses. The saving of expense would be enormous."

"Do you think your scheme is practicable today?"

"I can't say if it is practicable, because it never has been tried. But, theoretically, it is sound," replied the witness.

"And you think prices to the consumer would come down if the packers combined under a monopoly?" asked Mr. Heney.

Says Prices Would Come Down.

"No doubt about it," replied Mr. Armour. "I am, in fact, a great believer in the idea of large units if properly run. I would have packers put into a great corporation—all of them—under Government supervision. If it were possible to do this and the live stock men could be taken in, too, and the Government saw that all got a fair margin of profit it would be of distinct benefit all around. The cattle producer would get more for his live stock and the consumer would pay less for his meat."

"The five biggest packers are in a position somewhat analagous to that of the railroads in competiting territory—that is to say, it is much more economical to run one full train on one line than five half-filled trains on as many competing lines."

"I agree with you as to the economic possibilities under such a plan," conceded Mr. Heney. "Just as I believe that an autocracy is the most efficient form of Government, if you can find an autocrat wise and just enough, so I can agree that absolute monopoly in industry is the most efficient, if those at the head of it are sure to be wise and honest enough."

"That is why I favor Government supervision of the monopoly," said Mr. Armour. "It is difficult to find a man who does not get drunk from too much power."

"Is there not a tendency now on the part of the five big packers to drift toward just three companies—Armour, Wilson, and Morris?" asked Mr. Heney.

"I have heard talk of it," replied Mr. Armour with a smile. The witness spoke of owning 70 per cent. of stock in the Armour concern. Mr. Heney drew from the witness that he was a stockholder in several banks, including the National City Bank of New York, and that he had a "substantial, though not controlling" interest in the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad.

Figures from Food Administration.

Mr. Armour admitted that the Food Administration had supplied the packers with figures which they should use in making up inventories of their hog products, so as to determine what they would be allowed to make on their capital assets. Mr. Heney sought to show that through the use of these figures the packers were able to hide large profits.

The Food Administration figures, Mr. Armour said, were approximately 75 cents per 100 pounds under the prevailing market prices, 75 cents being the judgment of Food Administration experts as to the expense of marketing the products. This inventory value, Mr. Armour said, appeared on the books of Armour & Co. and the other packers as fixed by the Food Administration. In answer to Mr. Hepey's interrogation, Mr. Armour said that, had the administration estimate of marketing expenses proved too high, the added profit to the packers would not appear on the books.

Mr. Heney commented upon the fact, while the Food Administration had allowed the impression to get out that the packers, under Government regulation, had not been allowed to earn more than 9 per cent. on capital invested, they in reality were allowed to earn appreciably more.

"The liberality of the Food Administration was such that the packers did not make as much as they could have under the rules laid down," said Mr. Heney. He read from Armour & Co.'s statement of earnings for 1918, dwelling upon the fact that, while it included, under capital invested, the investment of the company in its South American properties, it did not include the earnings on these properties, which, as Mr. Armour admitted, approximated $10,000,000. If these earnings had been added to the others, aggregating $14,000,000, Mr. Heney said, the total return upon the invested capital would be 18 per cent. instead of 9 per cent., as given in the company's statement. Besides this, Mr. Heney said the company ought to have added an item of $4,000,000 for deduction in taxes, and had it done this the earnings would have run up to 30 per cent.

Mr. Armour expressed the opinion that the packers were making less profit now than thirty years ago.

"Early a Tacit Understanding."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25. (Associated Press.)—Mr. Armour denied that any agreement existed among the big packers to buy only certain percentages of hogs at various markets. He said Armour & Co. and, he thought, the others, tried to maintain the same relative position held when the National Packing Company was dissolved.

"What's the difference between such a tacit understanding and an actual agreement to control a market?" asked Mr. Heney.

"Well, it's hardly a tacit understanding. We simply try to do our share," replied Mr. Armour.

Armour & Co. buy on "a 50-50 basis" with Swift & Co. at Fort Worth and Denver, the witness said, because of the condition of the industry there.

If Wilson & Co. or any other packer bought in competition with Armour and Swift at Forth Worth," asked Mr. Heney, "wouldn't you go into a market where he was strong as a retaliatory measure?"

"Yes, if his activity continued for any length of time," Mr. Armour responded.

The Government should approve some agency to regulate the supply of meat that comes on the market each day "to prevent a glut," Mr. Armour said. This would replace the "Veeder pool" set up by the packers for that purpose and discontinued, he added.

Mr. Heney asked if there was not an understanding now that "none of the big five should interfere with business of the other four, as it was determined at the time of the Veeder pool."

"That's true in part," Mr. Armour replied. Representatives of all the packers visit the branch houses of the others daily to determine what the market situation is, he added.

PRESENT SHIP CLOCK.

Memorial to Fallen Soldiers and Sailors Turned Over to City.

The ship's clock and bell, the gift of Daniel G. Reid to the city as a memorial to the American soldiers and sailors who lost their lives in the war, was dedicated yesterday at noon at Pier A, North River. It was presented by Rear Admiral Josiah S. McKean, Acting Chief of the Bureau of Operations, on behalf of Mr. Reid to Dock Commissioner Murray Hulbert for the city, and Major Gen. David C. Shanks, Chief Embarkation Officer, on behalf of the army.

The ceremonies were in the Dock Commissioner's office and were attended by city officials, and army and navy officers. Speeches were made by Rear Admiral McKean, Major Gen. Shanks, and Murray Hulbert, who said that the clock was the first permanent memorial in the United States in memory of those of our heroic sons who had given the last measure of devotion to their country.

ON PACIFIST LIST, BUT SERVE NATION

Others Recorded in the "Who's Who In Radicalism" Are Now in Jail.

INDIGNANT DENIALS MADE

Dr. Charles A. Beard, Prof. Harry A. Overstreet, and Paul M. Kellogg Protest to Washington.

Several residents of New York City whose names were included in the "Who's Who in Pacifism and Radicalism," which was read on Friday at Washington to the Senate Committee which is investigating pro-German propaganda in this country, denied that their names were justly included in the list. Some of the New Yorkers on the calendar could not be reached because they were in jail, while others were in Europe with the help of passports recently issued by the State Department, and still others were busy in important Government employments.

Oswald Garrison Villard, one of the most prominent men on the list, now the publisher of The Nation and formerly the owner of The Evening Post, is in England as a journalist. In spite of the fact that The Nation was recently denied the mails for a time by the Postmaster General on the ground that it had contained seditious matter, Mr. Villard obtained a passport, but at last accounts the British authorities had not permitted him to proceed from England to France.

The Rev. Dr. Frederick Lynch, who has figured prominently in the Senate investigation of peace propagandists, is also in Europe. Dr. Lynch went abroad as the representative of the World Alliance of Churches.

Immigration Commissioner Frederic C. Howe, the leading spirit of the League of Small and Oppressed Nationalities, which sought to formulate a program for the peace table under which the claims of Scotland, India, Ireland, and most of the British colonies were to be adjudicated by an international tribunal, is in Europe, and it was stated that he was there on important official business, the nature of which could not be disclosed.

Fills Government Post.

One man on the list now holding an important Government post is Dr. George W. Kirchwey. He was recently appointed Federal Director of the United States Employment Service. Dr. Harry A. Overstreet, a psychologist at City College, who was also on the list, has been employed recently in the War Risk Bureau at Washington and was on the point of being commissioned a Major in the United States Army, he said yesterday, when peace was concluded. Dr. Charles A. Beard said he had been employed by a Government bureau in writing articles explaining America's course in the war. Katherine Richard O'Hare, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, and Roger N. Baldwin, who are on the list, are in jail for sedition.

Dr. Charles A. Beard, formerly of Columbia University, denied emphatically that he belonged on the list and said in a letter to Senator Lee S. Overman, Chairman of the committee:

"This morning's papers give a list of what purports to be pacifists and others active in movements which did not help the United States when the country was fighting the Central Powers, and in that list appears my name associated with the Intercollegiate Socialist Society and the Rand School for Social Science. As this does me a grave injustice and is at variance with the truth, may I give your committee the facts in my case:

I am not and never have been a pacifist.

I never belonged to Mr. Wilson's sweet neutrality band.

I did not vote for him in 1916 because I believed his pacifist policies wrong. I voted for Charles E. Hughes. I was never to "too proud to fight."

"At the time when Mr. Wilson was ordering his countrymen to be neutral in thought and deed and when the late Mr. Roosevelt was following in his footsteps, namely, in the Autumn of 1914, I was denounced at City College for a speech in which I attacked the Central Empires as responsible for that war and I was forbidden by the Acting President of that college ever to speak in the institution on that subject.

"When Nicholas Murray Butler, Assistant Secretary of War Keppel, and Elihu Root were manipulating the Carnegie peace millions, issuing pacifist pamphlets by the thousands, organizing pacifist societies in our colleges, employing Columbia instructors and professors to write pacifist tracts and to engage in pacifist agitation, I was teaching the truth that war has been one of the most tremendous factors in the origin of the State and the progress of mankind. My old students will bear witness to that fact. I never advocated war for war's sake, but I was never 'too proud to fight.'"

Professor Overstreet's Denial

Dr. Beard specifically denied that he had ever belonged to the pacifist organizations to which his name was attached in the list submitted to the Senate Committee. Professor Harry A. Overstreet of the College of the City of New York made a similar denial in a letter and said that, in a recent conversation with a high official of the War Department, that official had said to him: "You are exactly the same kind of a pacifist that I am."

Dr. Overstreet said in a letter to Colonel Archibald E. Stevenson, who said he had been making the investigation for the Intelligence Department of the Army:

"I find myself one of a list of persons described as having been active in movements which did not help the United States when the country was fighting the Central Empires. May I suggest that this description in my own case is quite false. It is true that before the United States entered the war I was one who, like President Wilson himself, opposed the entrance of this country into the war. At that time I was prominently connected with the Emergency Peace Federation and the Collegiate Anti-Militarism League.

"At the time of our entrance into the war, however, I had become convinced of the necessity of American participation in the great struggle and I had not only resigned from the Emergency Peace Federation and declined to write and act for the Collegiate Anti-Militarism League, but I had likewise declined most emphatically to join the Peace Council. My sympathy with our American war aims has been attested by the following facts: First, I devoted my Summer of 1918 to service in Washington in the War Risk Insurance Bureau; second, I made application for enlistment in the United States Army."

Dr. Overstreet then stated that he had received from the War Department a letter dated Dec. 18, 1918, which said:

"Recommendation that you be commissioned Major in the Sanitary Corps was in this office at the time of cessation of hostilities. The issuing of commissions ceased at that time, making your appointment as recommended impossible. Your desire to serve is fully appreciated, and from the records it appears that you are legally eligible for appointment in the Officers' Reserve Corps."

This letter, he said, was from the Chief of the Personnel Branch of the General Staff. Dr. Overstreet added that he did not attempt to deny the fact that he had been slow to be converted to American participation in war, but that, since our entrance in the struggle he had done everything in his power to contribute to its success.

Urges Repudiation.

Paul U. Kellogg, editor of The Survey, sent a telegram to Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, in which he said:

"In the name of common sense, fair play, and a decent regard for the public service to our common country of some of the truest, most farseeing, and courageous citizens our generation has produced, let me urge you to repudiate that indiscriminate, brutally unjust, fool-in-the-head list of Americans put under the ban by the Military Intelligence Division of the United States War Department at the Senate hearing yesterday. If Woodrow Wilson had been outside the White House his utterances would have put him on the list. You have done a big job too tremendously well to let your Administration and its breadth of spirit be dragged down at the eleventh hour by this outcropping of a cross between modern Prussianism and mediaeval taboo."

Dr. James P. Warbasse asserted that he had ceased all his pacifist activities from the time that the United States entered the war and that his inclusion in the list did him an injustice, so far as it conveyed the impression that he had acted unpatriotically during the war.

Dean Virginia C. Gildersleeve of Barnard College wrote to THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday, saying:

"In the list of alleged pacifists, radicals, and anti-war agitators issued by the Senate committee which is investigating German propaganda appears the name of Jessie W. Hughan, followed by the words 'Professor, Barnard College, New York.' Miss Hughan is a Barnard College graduate in the class of 1898, but she is and never has been a professor or an officer of any kind in the college. If this is a fair sample of the accuracy of the list compiled by the Military Intelligence Service and the Senate committee, it seems unfortunate that the allegations should have been given such sensational publicity."

Miss Hughan was quoted by The Brooklyn Eagle yesterday as saying:

"I am glad to appear on any list that begins with Jane Addams's name."

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 25.—A telegram protesting the classification of Professor Lindsay Todd Damon of Brown University as holding "radical and pacifist" views was sent tonight to Senators Colt and Gerry and to Archibald E. Stevenson of the Military Intelligence Bureau at Washington by members of the Faculty of the university, headed by Presidence Faunce.

DENIES SHE IS PACIFIST.

Prof. Vida Scudder Says She Has Been with Wilson in Sentiment.

WELLESLEY, Mass., Jan. 25.—Vida D. Scudder, professor of English literature at Wellesley College, who was listed by the Military Intelligence Bureau as one of those holding "radical and pacifist views," issued a denial today that she was a pacifist, or that she ever before had heard of the American National Conference Committee, of which she was said to be a member. She said:

"I am not a pacifist. From 1914 on, I have recognized the necessity that the German autocracy should be overthrown by force. I have been in sympathy with the policies of President Wilson, both while he kept us out of war and when he led us in. I am in full sympathy with them at this moment.

"I consider, however, that pacifists, standing as they do for a premature idealism, contribute a valuable element to society, and that their rights to free speech and to the respect of their fellow-citizens should be jealously guarded in a democracy.

"As to my alleged membership in the 'American National Conference Committee,' I know nothing whatever of this organization, whose very name is new to me."

PRESS CABLE APPEALS.

Motions Made in Supreme Court for Expediting the Cases.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Motions were filed in the Supreme Court today asking expedition of appeals brought by the Commercial Cable and the Commercial Pacific Cable companies from the refusal of the Federal District Court in New York to enjoin Postmaster General Burleson from taking possession of marine cables, operated by those companies and merging them with lines controlled by the Western Union Telegraph company.

"Not only is this litigation of the utmost consequence to the complainants, whose property has been seized," said counsel for the companies, "but the proposition that the exercise by the executive department of the Government of a power delegated by Congress cannot in any circumstances be questioned, reviewed or passed upon by the courts, is a proposition of the utmost public consequence."

The motions were taken under advisement, but court officials expect that arguments will be heard at the present term of court.

DIRECT PRIMARIES DIVIDE REPUBLICANS

Congressman Snell and Controller Travis Differ at Dinner to Glynn.

CHAIRMAN GETS A PITCHER

Ex-Gov. Whitman, in Presenting It, Says Stand on Prohibition Helped to Defeat New York Republicans.

A difference of opinion as to the direct primary law developed at a dinner given by his friends in the Republican Club last night to George Alexander Glynn, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, by his friends. Robert Bonynge, President of the club, was toastmaster, and the first speaker, Representative Bertrand H. Snell of Potsdam, N. Y., doubted the policy of the direct primary. State Controller Travis announced that he was a "direct primary man."

"The direct primary policy," said Congressman Snell, "builds a platform of whims and caprices, a platform that will hold the wets and drys, old maids and everything except organised Republicans. We have a proper Republican majority in Congress, but when they are lined up not all of them will be found Republicans. We could not expect anything less unless we see that men making history do not run too fast. I am not one of those men who believe in raising money to be distributed to howling mobs—we are giving too much attention to nations over there and not enough to the nation here. While I do not want to dodge citizenship, I don't believe in our country guarding the whole world."

Controller Travis laid the Republican defeat in this State to the B. R. T. wreck and the prevalence of influenza up-State which kept thousands of Republicans from the polls. Then he added:

"I am a direct primary man. I was a direct primary man for six years in the Senate, but I never ducked a Republican caucus. I won my nomination as Controller through the direct primaries."

Samuel Koenig, Chairman of the Republican County Committee, was called upon to explain the defeat at the last State election. "Let us first understand," he said, "that New York County is a Democratic county and without it there is not much left of the Democratic Party in this State. The last campaign in the city was fought under the most unfavorable conditions that a party ever faced since its history began.

"We had to meet not only a well organized and disciplined Democratic organization but thousands of persons interested in the issue who became voluntary workers and contributors to that party. Those who went to the polls in this city know that every saloon keeper, every bartender, and every person interested with them was on the sidewalk with a Democratic badge on. To criticise the Republican organization in this city is unfair and unjust. It was a combination of circumstances over which no individual leader was responsible that caused us in most Assembly districts to go down to defeat. No organization, no body of men could have prevented that defeat."

Mr. Whitman, in presenting to Chairman Glynn a silver water pitcher, also referred to the prohibition stand of the Republican Party as a cause for defeat. He said he knew of the chances for such a defeat when he took his stand, and he would repeat it again had he to do it over again. The defeat for standing for prohibition is only temporary, he said, because the sentiment throughout the land is overwhelmingly prohibition. "It is here and here to stay," he said emphatically. The former Governor carried out his prohibition convictions by drinking a toast to the President in water.

Mr. Glynn responded in a speech in which he thanked his friends for their confidence and their gift.

Three Taken to the Death-House.

OSSINING, N. Y., Jan. 25.—Joseph Miano, James Cassidy, and Charles McLaughlin, each 21 years old, convicted of the murder last November of Otto Fiala, Intervale subway ticket agent, arrived today in the death house. They are sentenced to die during the week of March 3, and were brought to Sing Sing by Sheriff James F. Donnelly of Bronx County following sentence this morning by Supreme Court Justice Richard H. Mitchell in the Bronx. A fourth man alleged to have been connected with the death of the elderly agent will be placed on trial Monday in the Bronx Supreme Court. The murderers arrived here this afternoon under exceptionally heavy guard.

HOTEL PENNSYLVANIA OPEN.

3,000 Visitors View Building and 2,000 of Them Dine There.

The $10,000,000 Hotel Pennsylvania, situated opposite the Pennsylvania Railroad station, on Seventh Avenue at Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets, opened its doors to the public yesterday, although a large part of the interior of the hostelry on the north side is yet to be finished and equipped. Of the total of 2,200 rooms, 700 were ready for guests, and all were taken in a few hours. Three thousand visitors viewed the building during the day and evening, and 2,000 of them dined and danced in the main dining room, on the Thirty-second Street side.

When all the rooms are ready for guests the daily income of the hotel may average $12,000 to $15,000, or more than $4,000,000 yearly, and the employes will number between 1,500 and 2,000. Sixty girls will be required to operate the hotel telephone exchange, with its 200 trunk lines. A few of the special features for the guests include a library of 4,000 volumes, Turkish baths, and swimming pools for men and women, and a roof garden. At the entrance to each restaurant in the hotel is a sign reading: "This checking service is free—you are not expected to tip." The resident manager of the hotel is Roy Carruthers, who managed the Fairmont and Palace Hotels at San Francisco.

PUT PRISONER IN HOSPITAL.

Raiolo, Accused of Killing Cafe Man and Wife, Victim of Influenza.

Frank Raiolo of 151 Classon Avenue, Brooklyn, was arrested last night at his home on a charge of homicide and taken to Jamaica Police Headquarters, where he was questioned for several hours in connection with the murder of Joseph Holbach and his wife in Holbach's Hall, South Ozone Park, last Monday. Raiolo, who declared that he had influenza when the police arrested him, became rapidly worse in the headquarters and finally was taken under guard to St. Mary's Hospital. It was said that additional arrests would be made today.

According to the police, Raiolo was identified from a group photograph as one of the four men who shot the café man and his wife. They also said that Raiolo and his wife told conflicting stories as to the young Italian's movements on the night of the crime. It was said that additional arrests would be made today.

MAKING PROGRESS ON REVENUE BILL

All Except Three Important Points Settled, Senator Simmons Announces.

INCLUDES WAR PROFITS TAX

Indications Now That Full Agreement May Be Reached Before End of Week.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The prospects for an agreement on the War Revenue bill in time to make possible a completed report next week were somewhat brighter today. The Senate and House conferees after a short joint session decided to meet again on Monday morning, when final proposals will be made by both sides. In the meantime separate conferences will be held by the opposing factions.

Senator Simmons, leader of the Senate conferees, said that substantial agreement had been reached on all but three important issues. No official statement was made as to the identity of these, but those who have followed the conference believe they include war excess profits taxes, the Senate's substitution of an inheritance tax for the original House estate tax and either the insurance tax or the second-class postal rates.

Minor points on which there still are some questions to be settled, including the Senate relief provisions allowing 20 per cent. tax exemptions on the sale of oil and gas properties and the proposal submitted by Senator Thomas for a tax of 100 per cent. on campaign contributions over $500.

The Senate conferees, it is understood, are still asking that the inheritance be substituted for the estate tax, in return for their willingness to compromise on the war excess profits tax.

In the event that a common understanding on these matters should be reached on Monday or Tuesday, it is possible that a final report on the completed bill may be reached next week.

It was reported unofficially that progress had been made toward an understanding on the second class mail matter. One rumor was to the effect that Senate conferees would be willing to give way, thus permitting the present zone system rates to remain in effect, rather than permit this point of controversy to block final agreement on the bill. The conferees refused to discuss this matter, however, and the report could not be confirmed.

There was a frank exchange of views today, and then adjournment was taken until Monday in order to give time for the preparation of final demands. There are members of the conference who even hope that most of the differences will be brushed aside at Monday's joint conference and that it may be possible to reach final agreement by Tuesday night.

BUILD THE SUBWAYS, GOVERNOR ADVISES

In the City Hall He Urges Both Sides to Stop Their Quarreling.

VISITORS FILL HIS ROOM

Politicians, Office Seekers, Delegations, and Persons with Complaints in a Steady Stream.

Governor Smith held his second "at home" in the Governor's Room of the City Hall yesterday, and from 11 o'clock until nightfall he received callers and transacted the business of the State. Nearly all day there was a constant stream of visitors, including politicians, seekers after office, delegations, and persons with complaints.

When the last caller had been disposed of the Governor went to the Board of Estimate room with Senator Foley and discussed with the board the letter from the Public Service Commission in which it complained that the Board of Estimate was hampering subway construction and that its refusal to appropriate sufficient money had made it necessary for the commission to dismiss engineers. The Governor said after the meeting that he thought the time had come when there should be less quarreling and more subway building.

"Of course," he added, "there are two sides to the question. The Board of Estimate says it asked for certain information which was not furnished. The Public Service Commission says it sent it. The Board never received it. I cannot give a decision in this matter. The only thing I can do is to urge both sides to stop quarreling and get together, vote the necessary money, and then go on with the subway."

"Are you going to urge the Legislature to adopt your plan for a single-headed commission?" the Governor was asked.

"That is the only solution," he answered.

One delegation was headed by John H. McCooey, Democratic leader of Brooklyn. It invited the Governor to attend the Emerald ball at the Waldorf-Astoria on Feb. 14. He took the invitation under consideration. An invitation to attend a memorial meeting to Grover Cleveland in the New Amsterdam Theatre on March 18 was presented by George F. Parker, who was President Cleveland's secretary. If his engagements permitted, the Governor said, he would be present.

Several women from the Bronx, headed by Mrs. Emeline Norman, called to ask the Governor to appoint Mrs. Ella O'Gorman Stanton, a sister of ex-United States Senator O'Gorman, as First Deputy Commissioner of the Industrial Commission. Sylvan Levy of Brooklyn came to tell the Governor that he was a candidate for Public Service Commissioner, and the latter said he would keep it in mind. A committee from the Tenants' League requested consideration for the bill introduced by Assemblyman Charles Solomon, Socialist, to prevent any extortion on the part of landlords.

Other callers were Patrick McNab of the National Letter Carriers' Association, who is a candidate for State Civil Service Commissioner; Justice Cornelius Collins of the Court of Special Sessions, Supreme Court Justice Peter Hendrick, Postmaster Alfred Kenney of Flushing, L. I., and Robert Rosecrans, who said he represented milk producers of New Jersey.

When Controller Craig's attention was called to the Governor's interview on the public service situation, he made this statement:

"For more than a year the Public Service Commission has been promising in writing to furnish definite information to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment concerning unfinished subway construction under the dual system. Promises repeatedly made have been as repeatedly broken. The Public Service Commission went so far in December, 1918, as practically to lock its doors on the examiners of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and to refuse any information whatever in support of their request for appropriations.

"Under such conditions an appropriation was made on Dec. 30, 1918, for the first three months for 1919. Thereupon Commissioner Whitney directed the dismissal of a large number of employes and made public a statement attempting to charge the responsibility for this and for all the prior misconduct of the Public Service Commission during the five years to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

"I believe it stands admitted that a transfer of $22, if requested by Commissioner Whitney, would have avoided the excuse for his discharge of eighty-eight men. This is a sample of the ruthlessness and disregard of the public interest with which he has proceeded. He doubtless expects to confuse the Legislature or the Governor to the belief that it is the Board of Estimate and Apportionment that should be removed from office for the B. R. T. Malbone Street wreck and other matters rather than the Public Service Commission."

GERMANS FEARED NEGROES.

Offered Reward for Each Colored Soldier Captured Alive.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY OF OCCUPATION, Jan. 4, (Associated Press.)—Wherever American negroes have appeared in the area occupied by the Americans they have attracted great attention among the civilians.

In Treves, Coblenz, and other places, during the early days of the occupation, crowds assembled wherever any negro soldiers stopped in the streets, and it was necessary for the military police to enforce the orders prohibiting gatherings in the public thoroughfares. Even yet in Coblenz and Treves, where there are a number of negro soldiers, the negroes attract crowds of German children every time they appear in the streets.

The German soldier also regards the negro with great curiosity. According to a discharged German soldier in Rengsdorf, the German army, early in the war, offered a reward of 400 marks for the capture alive of each negro. The discharged German soldier said that throughout the war German soldiers lived in great fear, and even terror, of the negroes, and it was in order to overcome this fear that rewards were offered.

One evening on the front a scouting party, consisting of ten Germans, including the discharged soldier, encountered two French negroes. In a fight which followed two of the scouting party were killed. One of the negroes escaped, the other being taken prisoner. In the fight two of the Germans left their comrades and ran to the protection of their own trenches, but these, it was explained, were young soldiers and untrained. The reward of 400 marks subsequently was divided among the remaining six Germans for capturing the French negro.

MORE SHIPS THAN CARGOES.

Sir Albert Stanley Expects Slump in Ocean Rates Next Summer.

LONDON, Jan. 25, (via Montreal.)—Sir Albert Stanley, President of the British Board of Trade, addressing the Huddersfield Chamber of Commerce last night, said he would be much happier if he could see stronger indications of restoration and development of trade in Great Britain.

There was plenty of trade obtainable in the world, he said, and it was the deliberate policy of the Government that restrictions and controls should be removed as rapidly as possible. The restrictions upon exports, however, must be maintained, he said, in respect to things vital to the interests of the allied nations. The blockade must also be maintained until peace was definitely secured. The Government proposed to end speedily the system of priority, possibly early in March.

Sir Albert said that there was more shipping available than cargoes, and it was expected that next Summer the world tonnage afloat would be equal to the pre-war tonnage. Thus a very big slump in shipping rates might be expected. He thought it was a fair suggestion that the Government should restrict imports until manufacturers were established on a peace footing, and the suggestion might be accepted by the Government. A ministry would shortly be established and experienced men had already been invited to join the board.

Sir Albert concluded by saying that strikes were the most difficult problems which must be faced and solved.

FEARS UNREST IN BRITAIN.

Leader Clynes Says Labor Conditions May Become Worse.

LONDON, Jan. 25, (via Montreal.)—Disturbed conditions of employment due to the transition from war to peace, high prices of food and the "energy of political enthusiasts" were given as reasons for the industrial unrest in England by J. R. Clynes, British labor leader, speaking at a luncheon given by the American Club today. A note of warning was sounded by the speaker, who said:

"As bad as conditions are at present, there is fear that they may become worse."

Mr. Clynes pointed out that grievances which have led to labor troubles in England recently were real, adding that "the strike habit has not yet grown to the extent of causing the men to throw down their tools without substantial underlying reasons."

APPOINTS NEW HEAD FOR B. R. T. LINES

Frederick P. Royce of Boston Named by Receiver Garrison to be General Manager.

HAS WIDE EXPERIENCE

Stockholders' Protective Committee Outlines Plans in Letter to Shareholders.

Lindley M. Garrison, receiver for the rapid transit lines of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit system, announced yesterday that he had appointed as General Manager of the lines Frederick Page Royce of Boston, an associate manager of the Stone & Webster Management Association of that city. The Stone & Webster organization manages electric railway and electric light and gas companies in various parts of the country.

Mr. Royce, who was born in Newton, Mass., in 1868, will have sole charge, under the receiver, of operating the lines, and he will have supervision also of all construction work. For twenty-eight years, or practically since his graduation from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, he has been actively engaged in the operating and construction departments of electric railways and other public utilities. For several years he was the executive head of a group of public utilities in Massachusetts, and, in 1909, one of the associate managers of the Stone & Webster organization.

It was said of him yesterday at the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Building that he had had wide experience in all branches of the administration public utilities, including construction work, investigation and analysis of public utilities situations and traction problems, in the preparation and carrying out of financial plans, in the direction of the work of local managers and in the maintaining of satisfactory relations with the public. He will take up his work in Brooklyn on Feb. 1.

The Stockholders' Protective Committee of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, of which Albert H. Wiggin, President of the Chase National Bank, is the Chairman, and of which Charles A. Boody, Frederick H. Ecker, Seward Prosser, President of the Bankers' Trust Company; Galen L. Stone, Frederick Strauss, and Everett B. Sweezy are the other members, addressed a long letter to the stockholders yesterday in which it was stated that, so far, 706,000 shares of the company's stock, out of a total of 744,651 shares outstanding, had been deposited with the committee.

After reciting the difficulties of the company, which led up to the receivership, and pointing out the danger that, "because of the exhaustion of their available resources, the companies may suffer default under the contract with the city, and, thereby, lose control of the new subways," the letter says:

"It is obvious both that the interests of the large mass of shareholders cannot be separately represented, and that the weight attached to any combined representation will be proportionate to the amount of stock controlled. It will probably be advisable for us to ask the court to permit us formally to intervene to the action in which the receiver was appointed, in which event, if the request be granted, we shall become entitled to participate in all subsequent proceedings therein.

"Since the receivership has now passed beyond the temporary stage, questions involving the interests of the stockholders will be presented at frequent intervals, for which reason those intending to cooperate for mutual protection should act promptly, as failure so to do may readily result to their serious loss. Accordingly, the committee has limited 3 o'clock P. M., March 3, 1919, the period within which deposits of stock may be made, after which no deposits will be received except under such conditions and penalties as the committee may impose.

Transferable certificates of deposit will be issued for all deposited stock, and application will be made to list the certificates of deposit on the New York Stock Exchange. The assignment on the back of the deposited certificates must be dated, signed by the stockholder, and witnessed, and New York State and Federal stock transfer stamps must be attached thereto. In order to protect the committee against unauthorized transfers, it is also necessary that signatures be guaranteed by members of the New York Stock Exchange, by a bank or trust company in the City of New York, or by a bank or trust company having a correspondent in that city.

The Committee adds that it will be glad to answer inquiries from stockholders and to procure and send them such information as it is in a position to obtain.

PASSENGERS PAY 7 CENTS.

Queens Residents Contribute Two Pennies Each to Keep Lines Going.

The Public Service Commission and the city officials have not granted the request of the New York & North Shore Traction Company, which operates lines in Queens Borough from Flushing to Whitestone, and to Hicksville, in Nassau County, but yesterday many of the passengers evolved a plan of increasing the fare on the line without official sanction. The company has been operating on a five-cent fare basis in the city, and in appealing for an increase in fare has insisted that it will be necessary to discontinue the line if the increase is not granted.

The passengers took the matter in their own hands yesterday, and as soon as the plan became known the conductors were swamped with two additional pennies besides the regular ticket fare. When Mrs. John K. Robinson of North Thirteenth Street, Flushing, entered a trolley car on State Street, Flushing, yesterday morning she handed the conductor two additional pennies. The conductor looked amazed. He thought it was a tip, and those things are rare on the North Shore trolley line.

"This line will go out of business if somebody does not do something substantial to help it out," said Mrs. Robinson.

LIFTS BAN ON PHOTOGRAPHS

American Army Abroad Removes Censorship Restrictions Also.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—Restrictions on the taking of photographs and moving pictures of men in the American Expeditionary Forces and in sections occupied by American troops have been suspended by orders from American General Headquarters, according to an announcement made by Captain William E. Moore, in charge of the photographic subsection of the General Staff. The order reads as follows:

"The original censorship orders have been amended to read as follows: 'All members of the American Expeditionary Forces, including militarized civilians serving with the army and authorized civilians visiting the sections occupied by the American Armies, are during the period of the armistice permitted to take photographs and moving pictures and to forward such photographs, negatives or prints to the United States or other countries, except enemy countries, by the ordinary channels without restriction and without submitting them to censorship.'"

COURT LIMITS RAIL DIRECTOR'S POWERS

Justice Benedict Denies That Congress Gave Authority to Annul Right of Suit.

REJECTS McADOO'S ORDER

Holds That Even the President Lacks Power to Set Aside Rights Vested by the State.

Justice Benedict, in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn, decided yesterday that Director General of Railroads McAdoo had no power to issue an order against the institution of lawsuits against railroad companies contrary to the code provision regulating such matters in New York State.

This decision was rendered in the case of Benjamin Moore & Co., paint dealers, incorporated in New Jersey and doing business in New York, against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway, a Kansas corporation, asking restitution for loss of oil in transit over the lines of the defendant from San Francisco to Carteret, N. J., in 1917. The railroad company asked to have the suit dismissed, alleging that a New York court had no power to settle an action involving corporations of foreign States, and, furthermore, contending that General Order 18 of the Director General of Railroads specified that such actions must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose or where the parties were resident.

"Congress did not, in my opinion," said Justice Benedict, "intend by this legislation either to extinguish or impair vested rights of action or to authorise the President or his agent or agents to do so. The President and his agent, therefore, had no power to make any order whereby a right of action already existing would be extinguished or cut off.

"If such be the effect of General Order No. 18, then I must hold that it was to that extent beyond the power of the Director General of Railroads, as the agent of the President, to make.

"Furthermore, the reading of the paragraph providing for these matters leads to the conclusion that Congress did not intend to authorize the President or his agent or agents to make orders affecting the jurisdiction of State courts or affecting the rights to maintain actions therein, since it is expressly provided, without qualification of any kind, that actions at law or suits in equity may be brought against carriers and judgments rendered as now provided by law.

"I have not considered the question of the power of Congress to take the subject matter out of the jurisdiction of this court, but as it is a matter of interstate commerce as to which Congress has plenary powers, I am inclined to think that Congress can do so. But I am doubtful as to whether Congress could delegate any such power to any executive officer or body. It is, however, unnecessary to decide these questions.

"The motion of the defendant, so far as it seeks dismissal of the action, must therefore be denied."

MADRID HONORS ALFONSO.

King on Name-Day Warns Nation of More Sacrifices.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—King Alfonso's name day, Jan. 23, was celebrated this year with exceptional solemnity, reports from Madrid show.

Replying to the speeches of the President of the two houses of the Cortes, the King dwelt on the critical period through which Spain was now passing while engaging in the great work of reconstruction, together with the rest of humanity that had suffered from the great war. He added that calm had not yet been restored, and declared that new sacrifices must be borne with for the sake of the welfare of the nation.

The celebration was marked, according to advices, by much enthusiasm.

HECKLE JAPANESE LEADERS

Opposition Deputies Say Interests in Siberia Are Sacrificed to America.

TOKIO, Jan. 22, (Associated Press.)—The opposition in the Lower House of the Japanese Parliament is continuing its heckling of the Government. Keisuke Mochizuki and others have charged the Government with placing the Siberian interests of Japan under American control and have argued that the projected League of Nations would prove futile. The unequal treatment of the Japanese by the United States has been likewise pointed to, as has the probability of American naval expansion.

The Government declined to reply to the interpellations along any of the lines indicated.

ENVOY FLETCHER RETURNS.

Will Discuss Mexican Question on Visit to State Department.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 25.—H. P. Fletcher, American Ambassador to Mexico, left Mexico City today for Washington to discuss with the State Department questions now pending between the United States and Mexico. He expects to be absent about six weeks.

The announcement of his departure was accompanied by a revival of various rumors in Mexico City. These rumors said that the conferences in Washington would be connected with the reported loan to Mexico by American bankers and with the decision of American capitalists with interests in Mexican oil and mineral lands to send a delegation to the Peace Conference.

MARCH EXPLAINS DEMOBILIZING PLAN

Declares Unit System Is Superior in Every Way to That of Discharge by Classes.

850,000 MEN SENT HOME

In Letter to Mann He Tells of Necessity of Early Action on Army Reorganization Bill.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—General March, Chief of the General Staff, in a letter written to James R. Mann, read to the House today, explained the War Department's plan of demobilization and declared that the program of discharging by units and not by classes, as in England, would be continued. All soldiers in camps and cantonments in the United States, except those necessary for demobilization purposes, would be discharged as promptly as possible, General March said.

"The War Department studied the question of demobilization very carefully before adopting any policy," General March wrote. "Two needs of the country were kept constantly in mind—first, the resumption as rapidly as possible of the normal industrial life of the country, and, second, replacement therein of individuals in the military forces and in occupations which ended upon cessation of hostilities. The War Department gave serious consideration to the plan of making the order of discharge depend on the availability of industrial positions to which the individual soldiers might return, as opposed to the plan of disbanding complete organizations in the order of their availability for discharge.

"The former plan was deemed impracticable. It would have involved processes of appraising the case of each soldier as a separate unit, endeavoring to compare his individual right to discharge with the rights of all others, and marshaling the priorities accordingly. Even if the likelihood of obtaining employment had been considered by classes such as farmers, metal workers, munition employes, &c., it would have been necessary to consider further the relative demand for each class in each separate section. The investigation necessary to an equitable determination of such a schedule if practicable at all under present conditions in this country, would have delayed all demobilization beyond reason.

"On the other hand, disbandment of complete military units could be and was immediately begun. In this way the military situation was safeguarded and at the same time demobilization was accelerated.

No Chance for Influence.

"The determining principle is that all of our soldiers, whose services are no longer needed, are entitled to discharge. The method adopted it is believed will accomplish that result with least delay and without favor to those who might have influential friends to intercede for them or to take up their cases individually with the War Department. The military situation and the actual mechanism of demobilization necessitate the retention in the service for the present of a considerable number of men trained and fitted to do the work required. It is doubtless difficult for these individuals to reconcile themselves to being held when their personal interests lie in their being discharged. But from this there is no escape. For them, the emergency is not ended, although the stimulation and excitement of actual warfare are over.

"As a result of the unit demobilization scheme of the War Department during the past six weeks upward of 800,000 men and approximately 50,000 officers have been discharged from our temporary forces. This constitutes an average for the whole period, since demobilization got fairly under way, of over 20,000 a day for six days a week. Certain large units organized for overseas service were promptly demobilized en bloc, and during that process the daily discharges ran well over 30,000. In this connection attention is invited to the discontent caused in England by the fact that the demobilization of the United States troops had proceeded so much more expeditiously than the demobilization of the British.

Great Delay Obviated

"Such results would have been simply impossible had it been attempted to discharge immediately every soldier who made individual application on industrial grounds. There are hundreds of thousands of men now returned to their families, home communities and industrial employment who might not have been released for months if the War Department had attempted to inaugurate a scheme of demobilization based largely upon individual requests for individual discharge. The absorption of these men into the general life of the country—their return to productive employment—has assisted in the permanent revitalization of industrial life and, has expedited the return of the country to its normal peace time condition.

"While the War Department released the impracticability of discharging an army of between three and four million men under a scheme based primarily upon individual applications for discharge, yet the need of some elasticity in the scheme of demobilization was always recognized."

Rights of Men from Overseas.

General March quoted War Department orders authorizing commanders to discharge enlisted men when there is sickness or other distress in the soldier's family or when he is needed to resume employment in which there is urgent need of his services. General March continued:

"Both soldiers and civilians, on learning of those instructions, seem to have assumed that a soldier had merely to submit a request for his discharge, stating that he had definite employment waiting for him and that he should immediately be discharged. Only such soldiers as could show themselves to be within the terms of the order were entitled to be discharged. Favorable action could be taken on only those applications which disclosed cases of exceptional merit.

"It is recognized that a certain amount of complaint and discontent is inevitable. The soldier who sees his neighbor leave while he is held is sometimes inclined to overlook the relative reasons therefor and declares himself a victim of negligence and incompetence.

"General Pershing has designated units to return from overseas service, and when these units return all men in the unit are promptly discharged. It would be most unfair discrimination to delay the discharge of any man arriving from overseas in those units while requests of certain men in the unit for discharge is being considered. It is not practicable to cull out and send back from overseas individuals who desire their discharge on industrial ground from various units overseas. If there exists a necessity for the unit to remain overseas it should be maintained in a state of efficiency. If a unit is not needed to be kept up in a state of efficiency overseas it should be sent home for discharge as promptly as transportation can be secured.

"In this connection attention is respectfully invited to the fact that we have practically no troops to relieve the soldiers who are in the service for the emergency only in performing the necessary military duty at home and abroad. The Secretary of War has brought to the attention of Congress the importance of securing at once the legislation requested, authorizing the resumption of voluntary enlistments and re-enlistments in the army. As you know, it is now impossible to enlist man for the regular service, all definite period enlistments have been suspended by the act of May 10, 1918, and only emergency enlistments authorized. We find a number of men at all camps who would like to stay in the regular service if they could enlist at once, but the uncertainty of legislation is likely to induce them to look for employment in civil life and therefore to take the first chance to secure discharges."

THREE SHIPS BRING 4,000 TROOPS HOME

Transports Atenas and Maul and French Liner Rochambeau Arrive Here.

1,000 GIVEN SHORE LEAVE

Surgeon Says That Only 110 American Soldiers Were Blinded in War.

Four thousand troops arrived from France yesterday on three transports and docked at Hoboken and New York, but only 1,000 of that number were allowed to land. They were on the French steamship Rochambeau and the American steamship Atenas, while the 1,000 troops on the Maul were kept on board for the night, as they did not reach the pier in Hoboken until after 5 o'clock in the evening.

The 883 officers and men on the Rochambeau were seventeen days coming from Bordeaux, and said they were tired of the sea and the ship and were very glad to set their feet down once more in America. The fact that the French vessel had put into Halifax, Nova Scotia, and stopped there four days to take on coal did not appear to have appealed to the military passengers. The Rochambeau left Bordeaux on the night of Jan. 8, and after three days of fairly rough weather something happened in the engine room, and from that time on all the engineers could get out of her was nine knots instead of sixteen, which made a big difference.

After watching the soldiers eat their breakfast on the following morning a similar performance by their officers in the cabin, Commander Juham, one of the veterans of the French Line, decided that the rations must be cut down and notified the commissary manager to that effect. There were also 554 civilians on board, who had to be fed. There were all sorts of conjectures on board as to what had happened, and some said it was the coal, while others thought it was the starboard high-pressure cylinder that had got the creup, or that the port propeller had been damaged by a giant devilfish in the Bay of Biscay. Some of the army officers sent petitions to the Captain and asked if they could see the Aldrer on the way home, and a group of Dutch Presbyterians, who were on a mission to the East Indies expressed a desire to visit Madeira, if it was all the same to the commander and the chief engineer.

In the meantime the engineers were busy day and night trying by every known means to get more speed out of the ship, but it was of no avail, and she wheezed at eight to nine knots when it was fine. There was plenty of good coal in the bunkers for a normal voyage from Bordeaux to New York, the officers said yesterday, but not for a cruise of that kind. The cabin passengers had to go short of marmalade, and the Indian officers had to eat their breakfast curry with out the customary bubly-mushee, they said, but there was no real suffering.

A baby was born and one passenger got appendicitis before Halifax was reached.

Some of the passengers said that the accident was due to the number of surgeons and physicians on board, who were returning home after working with the army, Red Cross, or in the military hospitals in France. One of the most distinguished of them was Lieut. Colonel Allin Greenwood of Boston, who was Senior Consulting Eye Surgeon with the American Army abroad, and who declared yesterday that the number of soldiers blinded in the war had been very much exaggerated.

"The people have been deceived," he said, "by a circular sent out appealing for funds for the American blind, and I have already sent a report to Washington on the subject. It is not true that hundreds of American soldiers have lost their sight. In the entire American Expeditionary Force there are not more than 110 men entirely blind, and only a small percentage, perhaps seventy or more, whose eyes are still in bad condition.

"It is a mistake," Lieut. Col. Greenwood continued, "to suppose that blindness comes from either shell-shock or gas. In practically every case we observed a bullet came in direct contact with the optic nerve or literally forced out the eye. The sight of many of our men was saved by magnets. The United States established a base at Paris, where seventy workers manufactured glasses and optical instruments. The demand for glasses could not be called large, for we were taking care of the eyes of 2,000,000 men. How many optical stores would you see in a city of 2,000,000 inhabitants?

"I would put the demand for glasses in France away below the number likely for such a city." He added that a few more may lose their sight later from their injuries, but that the total will be very small compared with the number of men in the American Army abroad. Lieut. Col. Greenwood said that there was also a hospital for treating blinded soldiers at Savenay, in France, near Nantes, where a school had also been started under a New York teacher named Baker, who has been blind since he was six years old, and who has been doing very good work with his assistants.

Roosevelt's Son-in-Law Returns.

Another surgeon on board was Lieut. Col. George F. Derby, son-in-law of the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, who has been in hospital work in France since America entered the war, and who said that he had nothing to say except that the surgeons and physicians who went over from this country had done good work in the field and in the military and base hospitals. Other surgeons were Colonel George W. Crile, who went over early in the war in charge of the Lakeside Hospital Unit from Cleveland, Ohio, and who said yesterday that it was not ethical in his opinion to give interviews while he still wore a uniform, Colonel Fred T. Murphy of St. Louis, Colonel James F. McKernon of New York, and Lieut. Col. Arthur W. Eltinge.

The officers and men on board consisted chiefly of the 337th and 329th Field Artillery, who went over in August and October, 1917, respectively, and came from the Northwest. There were also a number of aviators on the Rochambeau.

Captain L. Crillon Chapman of 87 West End Avenue was with the French Flying Corps, and joined the Lafayette Escadrille in 1914, when it numbered forty, but only thirteen remain alive today. He fought on all fronts, had three planes to his credit officially, and was decorated with the Military Cross and the War Cross with palm and three stars. He was brought down in the Champagne in February, 1917, and so severely injured that he had to go to a hospital for three months.

On that occasion he was on a bombing trip with twenty other planes and a squadron of Fokkers attacked them and three of the French planes were lost before he went down. After the Lafayette Escadrille was disbanded, in the early Summer of 1917, he joined the 110th Aero Squadron of the American Flying Corps.

Captain John A. King was with the American independent flying forces and was flying to Metz on a bombing trip when he was brought down inside the German lines on Aug. 19, 1918. He escaped later and got within a hundred yards of the American lines when a machine gun stared him in the face and there was nothing to do but to go to a German prison camp until the war was over.

Among the Salvation Army workers on board was Katherine Holbrook, wife of Captain Holbrook from Denver, Col. Mrs. Holbrook was wounded in the hip by a shell on Oct. 5, when she said the Germans dropped their shells in the transfer stations where the wounded soldiers were lying before being taken to the base hospitals.

Has 119 Casuals Aboard.

The transport Atenas had 119 casuals from Brest, under the command of Major Gen. Charles C. Ballou of Washington, D. C., which included 97 officers from various branches of the service, and enlisted men from the army and navy. Some of the men were from the 92d Division, known as the Buffaloes, who had fought in the Vosges, the Argonne, and St. Mihiel. They left New York on June 7, 1918, and went into action on Aug. 12. The Major General said that all were good fighters, and were commanded by splendid officers.

Lieutenant R. D. Calloway of Dallas, Texas, who also returned, won the French War Cross while flying with the 93d Aero Squadron, and had brought down several German planes at the Argonne and St. Mihiel.

Captain Clinton L. Hill, a Chicago negro of the 307th Infantry, was at Soissons when an explosive shell tore away his jaw and knocked out his teeth. A clever surgeon in France replaced his jaw, gave the gallant captain a new set of teeth, and he was rewarded with the French War Cross.

The troops on all the transports were welcomed yesterday in the bright, cheery sunlight by the industrious Police boat Patrol, which never rests very long these days at the side of Pier A.

The 3,068 troops on the Maule, which arrived last, included 76 casual officers, 2,196 casual troops, Companies A, B, and C of the 814th Infantry, colored, 593 all told, and men from various other regiments. Many of them had gone through the fierce fighting at Chateau-Thierry, Argonne, Champagne, and St. Mihiel.

Decorated by Pershing.

Major Jesse W. Woolridge of San Francisco was wounded four times while Captain of Company G, 38th Infantry. He was bayonetted in the throat at the Marne, received three machine-gun bullets at the Vesle River, and carried for a while three and a half inches of shrapnel driven into him in the Argonne. General Pershing personally decorated him April 15, 1918, at Château-Thierry, with the Distinguished Service Cross and gave him a personal citation for having led 180 men in a counterattack against odds of more than five to one at Château-Thierry. Only fifty-one men of the Captain's little contingent came out of that encounter unscathed, and more than 1,000 Germans were killed, wounded, or captured.

Lieutenant William Hodson of Athens, Ga., attached to Company B, 47th Infantry, was wounded four times while in action on the Vesle River. Among his experiences he cites an encounter with a German machine-gun crew which he captured. Although wounded, he did not stop fighting. He was finally wounded in the stomach and lay for twenty-seven hours on the field. During that time he had a desperate fight with a wounded German officer who attacked him with a trench knife. He killed this officer. While on night patrol in the Argonne with 48 men an opposition patrol of 60 men was encountered. Trench knives were used, and 32 Germans were left dead on the field, while 16 escaped; 16 Americans were wounded in this encounter.

The Cunarder Caronia with 2,000 troops on board arrived in Quarantine late last night and will go to Pier 56, North River, foot of West Fourteenth Street, early today. Many of the troops aboard are from Ohio.

27TH DIVISION IS DUE IN NEW YORK FEB. 22

Guardsmen Will Leave France About Feb. 15—77th to Embark About March 5.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Word has been received by the War Department that the 27th Division, New York National Guard, will be put aboard transports in France about Feb. 15 and that an effort will be made to get the men back to New York by Feb. 22, Washington's Birthday. It also was announced that the 77th Division, New York National Army, was expected to embark from France about March 5.

The transport Minnekahda, which is due at New York Feb. 1, will bring about 200 officers and 2,500 men, including the headquarters company, machine gun company, supply company, medical detachment, and Companies A, B, C, D, I, K, L, and M of the 28th Infantry, 83d Division cadre, consisting of seven officers and 132 men; a casual company of Alabama troops and 142 casual officers.

Another transport, the Plattsburg, due at New York Jan. 30, has on board about 50 officers and 1,500 men, including the 323d Machine Gun Battalion complete, 339th Infantry's Machine Gun Company, 7 Casual Companies, composed of New York troops, and 6 officers and 222 men in the sick and wounded class.

The Tivives, a cargo carrier, due at New York Feb. 6, has a detachment of ten New Yorkers and forty-five casual officers; and the Arakan, due there on the same date, brings thirteen casual officers and a casual detachment of six New York men.

450,000 TONS FOR AMERICA.

England to Divide German Merchant Fleet with United States.

It was announced yesterday that the German ships allotted to the United States for the return of American troops aggregated 450,000 tons, including the giant Hamburg-American liner Imperator, which is 5,000 tons less than the United States transport Leviathan, which was formerly the Vaterland. The Imperator has been laid up at Hamburg since her arrival there at the end of July, 1914, just before war began, and is expected to arrive in New York within the next four weeks with several thousand American soldiers.

Great Britain will also receive 450,000 tons, the total of 900,000 representing all the tonnage held in German ports during the war. It is understood that the United States will receive the larger vessels, but it is not yet known here just which ships other than the Imperator these will be.

The steamships now known to be in German ports are:

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE.

Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, 24,581 tons; built in 1905.
Cleveland, 16,960 tons; built in 1908.
Batavia, 11,464 tons; built in 1899.
Graf Waldersee, 13,193 tons; built in 1898.
Patricia, 14,462 tons; built in 1899.
Pretoria, 13,234 tons; built in 1897.
Victoria Louise, 16,703 tons; built in 1900.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD LINE.

Berlin, 17,324 tons; built in 1908.
Bremen, 11,540 tons; built in 1897.
Koenigin Louise, 10,785 tons; built in 1896.

In addition to these there were under construction in Germany at the start of the war for the Hamburg-American Line the Fuerst Bismarck, 56,000 tons, one of the largest ships in the world, and for the North German Lloyd Line the Zeppelin, 15,200 tons, launched in June, 1914, and the Columbus, of 35,000 tons.

TO STUDY RESOURCES OF GERMAN ARMY

Allied Committee Will Then Be Able to Settle How Allied Forces May Be Reduced.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—To ascertain the strength and resources of the German Army will be the first problem considered by the Military Committee appointed Thursday by the Supreme War Council to report on the strength of the allied and associated forces to be retained on the western front during the armistice.

It was assumed that the Germans had about 500,000 men under arms, but it is necessary to confirm these figures and determine to what extent the manufacture of arms, munitions, and other military supplies is going on.

The purpose is to maintain a strength at all times superior to the present or potential strength of the Germans. There are now eight American divisions in Germany and the findings of the committee will determine what efforts can be made to reduce this force and send the men home. The British and French commands share the desire to hasten demobilization, so it is expected that the committee will report at an early moment.

The inquiry is understood not to apply to Entente and American forces in Siberia and at Archangel, where they will be maintained pending the issue of the Princes' Islands conference.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Major General Sir Henry H. Wilson, chief of the imperial staff, has been appointed to the committee named by the Allied and Associated Governments to consider the strength of the forces to be maintained on the western front during the armistice.

NAVAL PROGRAM IS HELD UP.

Some Legislators Would Await Action Abroad on Disarmament.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Sharp division among members of the House Naval Committee over the wisdom of deciding on a second three-year building program until after the Peace Conference's decision on world disarmament, has led to the delay of a week before attempting final action.

Meanwhile, President Wilson may be asked by administration leaders in Congress to urge Democratic members to vote for the program. The leaders are said to be considering sending a cablegram to the President, but decline to discuss their plans.

Chairman Padgett desires a favorable report, and while supporters of the program say they are in the majority, they admit that such a report could only be brought from the committee on a close vote and probably would be accompanied by one from the minority. A meeting for final decision has been set for Friday.

The program calls for sixteen capital ships, including six battle cruisers. The committee is said to have learned that Admiral Sims and other naval authorities are not agreed regarding this type and it has been decided tentatively not to specify construction of the battle cruisers, regardless of the ultimate fate of the general program.

CUTHELL TO AID BAKER.

Will Represent Secretary in Dealing with Allied Military Men Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Secretary Baker announced today that he had appointed Chester N. Cuthell of New York as his representative to work out, with the representatives of the allied nations in this country, the relations growing out of orders of war material and exchanges of material and service between the War Department and the European Allies in the United States.

Mr. Cuthell, who will have offices in the War Department, was until recently general counsel of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. His work will be in relation with a commission in France having charge of similar matters abroad, the purpose of the entire arrangement being to provide for the immediate gathering together of all the outstanding business relations between the War Department and those several Governments, so that they can be promptly and equitably administered.

"This," said Mr. Baker, "is following out a policy worked out between Mr. Stettinius and the Secretary of War."

With regard to the order issued, providing that men may be retained in the service on their application and not discharged, the Secretary said:

"What the order means is this: In order to guard the property of the War Department and take care of the receiving and demobilizing of the men who are come home from Europe, a large number of men have to be kept in the service. We want to retain for that service men who want to be retained, rather than men who do not want to be retained. Demobilization is going on as usual, except as modified by this order."

Commenting on the station at Blois, France, for "examining officers," the Secretary said:

"Blois is a very great institution; it is a reassignment depot. It was the salvation of a very large part of the efficiency of the army."

MORE FOOD FOR NEAR EAST.

Two Steamers Depart with Supplies Worth $2,500,000.

Two more steamships filled with supplies for the relief of the Greeks, Armenians, Syrians, and Jews in Asia Minor were dispatched yesterday by the American Committee for Relief in the Near East. The cargoes were valued at $2,500,000, it was said by representatives of the committee.

The steamers were the naval transport Pensacola, which loaded at Pier 62, North River, foot of West Twenty-second Street, and the Cape Lookout, which loaded at Baltimore. They are taking food, clothing, agricultural machinery, and motor trucks.

Among the volunteers who left on the Pensacola yesterday to do relief work were Dr. Manning C. Field of Brooklyn, the Rev. Joseph W. Beach of Bangor, Me.; Carleton T. Smith of West Newton, Mass.; Lucius T. Thayer of Portsmouth, N. H., and Thomas W. Farnsworth of Hartford, Conn.

13TH TO BE MUSTERED OUT.

Brooklynites Assured That They Will Be Civilians on Tuesday.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Jan. 25.—Though expressing dissatisfaction at having been sent to Camp Upton instead of Fort Hamilton as they expected, members of the 59th Coast Artillery found comfort today in the assurance that they would be mustered out Tuesday. The Brooklyn heroes attended entertainments especially arranged for them in the Liberty Theatre, K. of C. and Y. M. C. A. huts tonight. The men spoke in the highest terms of the work of the Salvation Army at the front. They said that they would never forget the priceless doughnuts made by the women of that organization.

The boys expressed surprise that they were not allowed to talk with relatives either at Hoboken or in Long Island City. However, many of their relatives, including wives and sweethearts, came to the cantonment today and more are expected tomorrow.

Not the least anxious of the soldiers to get home is Anthony Lo Forte of 232 Saratoga Avenue, Brooklyn. He has a four month old son, whom he has never seen. Albert Kreppein is also desirous of reaching 76 Hazel Street, Brooklyn.

There his young wife is awaiting him. He also wants opportunity to get in touch with the Washington authorities as the fate of his step brother, Fred Moewe of the 304th Infantry, whom he last saw for a few minutes on Oct. 26 at the front.

TO CHEER WAR'S WOUNDED.

Red Cross and Surgeon General Adopt Plan to Uplift Morale.

A co-operative plan for improving the morale of the wounded and sick soldiers in the forty reconstruction hospitals in the United States has been adopted by the Surgeon General of the Army and the American Red Cross, according to a statement issued yesterday in Washington. The plan contemplates such diversion and training as will contribute to the recovery of the men and to the cheerfulness of the able-bodied personnel of the hospitals. The work will be under the general direction of Dr. Elbert K. Fretwell, head of the department of Educational Leadership at Teachers College, Columbia University.

The Red Cross will be primarily responsible for social recreation, the furnishing of equipment and the training of the personnel for the work, while the Surgeon General's office will be more particularly concerned with physical education.

The recreational work will be varied with the needs of the individual soldiers.

Boyle Was Captured by the Moewe.

Barney Boyle, whose name is in a list of twenty-seven American sailors released from German prison camps, was a member of the crew of the Esmeralda, which was captured and sunk by the Moewe early in 1917. His home is in Scranton, Penn. He is a brother of Charles Boyle, formerly of THE NEW YORK TIMES, now in the Naval Reserve.

RETAILERS PROFITING NOW

Consumer Still Paying Too Much, According to P. Q. Foy, Market Expert.

While the marked decline of the last ten days in prices of staple commodities has been reflected to some extent in prices to the consumer, the opinion prevails in various sections of the city that the retailer has not allowed the consumer the full benefit of the lower prices.

There was a substantial reduction yesterday in prices of meats and other commodities, according to P. Q. Foy of The Market Report, which was in addition to slight declines noticeable in different sections during the week. Mr. Foy said last night that the present prices would seem high two weeks from now, as we are bound to get down to something like pre-war standards in prices.

Comparison of prices listed by the New York Food Board in its last "Fair Price List," issued on Jan. 14, with the present prices, shows that the retailer is making an even larger percentage of profit, in many cases, than he did when the prices were higher and were regulated by the Federal Food Board. Some of the prices are given in the following table:

	Food Board Prices. Retail.	Present Prices. Retail.
Lima beans	17 @17½	15 @16
Pea or medium beans	14½@15	10 @13

Beef, hinds, and ribs, formerly 29 to 33 cents a pound wholesale, now 23 to 26 cents; a comparison of the retail prices of the Food Board and now follows:

	Board Price.	Present Price.
Sirloin steak	41@48	38@42
Top round	48@52	38@42
Bottom round	48@50	36@40
Rib roast, prime	45@49	37@42
Rib roast, chuck	35@40	30@35
Whole top sirloin	42@46	35@40
Cut top sirloin	46@50	40@45

Beef chuck steak, on which the Food Board allowed a margin of profit of 11 cents a pound, is now selling to the retailer for 16 to 23 cents, and he in turn gets 25 to 28 cents. Whole cross rib, on which the Food Board allowed a profit of 18 cents, is now 22 to 25 cents to the retailer and 28 to 35 cents to the consumer. Cut cross rib is 24 to 27 cents to the retailer and 30 to 37 cents to the consumer. On this grade of meat the Food Board allowed a profit of 22 cents.

Fresh lamb is selling for 23 to 28 cents to the retailer, who receives 23 to 40 cents for it. Kosher chucks and plates, medium to choice are selling at 25 to 27 cents wholesale, and the prices to the consumer are given as follows:

Soup meat, untrimmed, 27 to 32 cents; shoulder steak, untrimmed, 30 to 33 cents; breast, trimmed, 32 to 36 cents. Pork loins, Western light, are sold to the retailer at 22 to 27 cents and to the consumer at 32 to 38 cents, and pork chops 25 to 36 cents to the retailer and 35 to 42 cents to the consumer.

The wide range in prices is said to be due to the prices that are charged by the different stores, depending somewhat upon the locality. The Federal Food Board, in making up its "fair price list," took into consideration the location of the stores, cost to do business, &c.

Last week was a record one for egg receipts. The New York Daily Market Report said yesterday:

"Receipts for the week, 44,160 cases; same six days last year, 26,148 cases. This was a record week in the egg market. The absence of Winter conditions is reflected in the gradual increase of eggs from all sections, even Nebraska and other northerly sections that usually do not ship eggs until the middle of March are now offering carloads."

Of the butter receipts The Market Report says:

"The receipts this week have shown an increase of 4,000 packages over those of last week and nearly double those of the corresponding period last year. The millions of unemployed all over the United States have greatly upset the calculations of financiers, while there has been cancellation of considerable foreign contracts as a result of the abundant supply of New Zealand and Argentine butter on the British markets. The impairment of the purchasing power of so vast an army of consumers could not fail to affect the financial situation and led to a decline of 7 to 8 cents a pound since Monday."

The Market Report gives the receipts of cattle here at 4,850 head, as against 3,250 head the week before. The receipts of live calves were so heavy, The Report says, that there was a decline of 2 to 3 cents a pound on top veals, while the common kind suffered a greater price shrinkage. The country-dressed calves declined 8 to 10 cents a pound, and, says The Report, "tons of veals had to be frozen in absence of any other outlet."

Heavy receipts of poultry, with lowering prices, are also reported.

SEEK AID FOR HOSPITAL.

Campaign in Jewish Schools for Institution for Consumptives.

A campaign to raise funds among children attending the Jewish religious and Sabbath schools throughout the country to erect a children's pavilion as an addition to the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver, Col., was announced yesterday by Ben Altheimer, Treasurer of the hospital and a member of the Executive Committee. The National Jewish Hospital, said Mr. Altheimer, admits no paying patients, and during the nineteen years of its existence 70 per cent. of the 3,500 patients treated had either been cured or the disease has been sufficiently arrested to enable them to become self-supporting.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Hospital held at the Hotel Biltmore on last Sunday, Mr. Altheimer was appointed Chairman of a national committee of fifteen members to direct the campaign. Other members of the committee including Mrs. Alexander Kohut of New York, Vice Chairman; Dr. W. S. Friedman of Denver, Mrs. S. Plaks, Charles A. Studin, R. Sadowsky, and Nathan J. Miller of New York; I. Walter Frieberg, Cincinnati; Mrs. M. C. Sloss, San Francisco; Jacob Epstein, Baltimore; Colonel Harry Cutler, Providence, R. I., and Aaron Faldheim of St. Louis.

The next annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives will be held in this city, it was announced, in honor of Mr. Altheimer's seventieth birthday.

SURPRISE DR. SCHULMAN.

Rabbi Gets Gift of Liberty Bonds After Twenty Years' Service.

The congregation of Temple Emanu-El, at Fifth Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street, sent Dr. Samuel Schulman a present of twenty $1,000 Liberty bonds before the service yesterday which marked the close of the twentieth year of his connection with the synagogue.

The bonds were sent to Dr. Schulman before the service with a letter expressing the esteem and good wishes of the congregation. The arrangements for the gift had been made secretly, and Dr. Schulman was taken completely by surprise. After the sermon yesterday, in which he expressed his thanks to the members of the temple, the congregation crowded about him to congratulate him on his long term as their religious leader. Jacob H. Schiff, Oscar Straus, and Nathan Straus were among those at the service.

The $20,000 Liberty bond testiminial was planned and carried out by Mrs. Lazarus Kohns and other members of the congregation. Dr. Schulman came to this city from Kansas City twenty years ago, and leaves today for Kansas City to pay a visit to the members of his old congregation.

New Fashions for Spring

IT is quite evident that the greatest activities must exist wherever the style-makers have returned to their customary channels, for an unmistakable tension pervades the whole world of fashion, watching day by day for the newer developments.

Already the most beguiling things have appeared, clothes of such charming originality that only the most optimistic, a few months ago, dared to dream would come forth from the Spring ateliers. All the art that goes into the harmony of dress seems to have been expended upon the post-war costumes, and on the innumerable items of the new period. The initial things now displayed are expressive of all that is really significant in the question of dress and should prove of immediate appeal to every woman in search of individuality.

Charming Dresses for Misses and the Younger Set

The present assortment is almost bewildering in its variety. Especially captivating are the evening and dance frocks; the designs and materials affording an almost unlimited range for selection. Then, too, there are the simple, practical models for daytime wear, and sports garments for the approaching outdoor season.

DRAFT BOARD WORK IS TOLD BY CONBOY

638,927 Men Registered in City on June 5, 1917, and Aug. 24, 1918, Figures Show.

STATISTICS FOR BORQUGHS

Enrollment on Sept. 12 Last Put the Total for New York City Up to 1,420,024.

The results of the work of the 189 Local Draft Boards in New York city have been compiled by the Director, Martin Conboy. The figures deal only with the registrations of June 5, 1917, and Aug. 24, 1918. In connection with tables presented, Mr. Conboy points out that while these tables will give an idea of the work of the various boards, it is not fair to make strict comparisons or to gauge the value of a board's work by the number or percentage of men inducted. The various conditions under which the different boards worked must be taken into consideration in each instance, he says.

Induction of registrants of Sept. 12, 1918, did not proceed sufficiently far to warrant the compilation of any comparative figures in regard to that registration. The number registered on that day was 781,097, making New York City's total registration 1,420,024. Of the Sept. 12, 1918, registrants 381,052 have been classified, making a total classification in New York City of 1,020,879.

Of that registration 8,253 were inducted and 1,991 entered the service (V-D), making a total induction of 145,128, and a total of other registrants in service of 47,369, a grand total of registrants in service of 192,497. In addition thereto, New York City was allowed enlistment credits on the first draft of 32,429, making a total from New York City definitely accounted forces being in service of 224,926.

With the exception of this enlistment credit, applicable to the registrants of June 5, 1917, none of these figures give any idea of the number of men who entered the military or naval service before they were respectively required to register. Such men never came under the jurisdiction of the local boards, and their number can be ascertained only by reference to the records of the Adjutant General of the Army, which have not as yet been made available.

The first column in the table below indicates the Boroughs of the city; the second, the total registration in the borough; the third, the number of men inducted; the fourth, the number of others in the service (class V-D), that is, those who enlisted in the service after they had registered; and the fifth, the percentage of men in service (inducted and in V-D) to the registration as shown in the second column.

Tailors Compile Measurements from Soldier Standards.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 25.—The committee appointed by the National Association of Merchant Tailors, which will meet in convention in this city next week, has found after investigations in cantonments that the "perfect man" measurements are as follows: "Height, 5 feet 8 inches; weight, 148½ pounds; chest, 38 inches; waist, 33½ inches; hips, 39½ inches; thigh, 21¼ inches, and calf, 14¼ inches."

"You can't beat the standard taken by the army," said one of the committee. "There is no reason why this perfect man should not be the world model. The idea that physical perfection among men should be measured by bulk is all wrong. The exactly proportioned American male should fit into the measurements we have worked out."

A NEW JOB FOR KNITTERS.

Men Who Have Lost Legs or Arms Need Stockings for the Stumps.

Demand for workers in a new line of knitting has been sent out by Mrs. W. S. Popham, Chairman of the National Booth Committee of the Navy League, 43 East Forty-fourth Street. This is for a stocking-like garment to be worn by men who have lost arms or legs. There is great need of the additional warmth where the circulation is not good.

The women of the Booth Committee discovered the need when they found nurses at Ellis Island using bed socks they had sent for this purpose. Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew investigated the matter, found the dimensions of the knitted article which could best be used for the purpose and these are now ready to give out. Two of these new kind of stockings can be made from one hank of yarn, and many women, it is hoped, will have leftover material which can be used. Directions can be obtained at the National Booth Committee headquarters and also at the Grand Central Terminal and the Pennsylvania Station, where it has booths, as well as in some stores. Wool can be had at cost if the garments are returned to the headquarters for distribution. Dr. McClellan, head surgeon at the Greenhut Debarkation Hospital, has expressed pleasure at receiving these stockings, and says that each man should have at least six.

FOR AID TO ASSYRIANS.

American Bishops Urge Their Claims Be Heard.

Fifty-four Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country and fourteen in Canada have cabled to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York a petition to use their influence to obtain recognition by the Peace Conference of an Assyrian delegation to present the claims of the Christians of Mesopotamia, Kurdistan, and Persia for protection and rehabilitation. Professor W. W. Rockwell of the Union Theological Seminary stated that the project had the approval also of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, and financial assistance to the extent of $1,000 was set aside by Theodore Roosevelt, just before his death, from the Nobel Peace Prize of 1906.

Professor Rockwell also made public a cablegram on behalf of 70,000 Assyrian Christian refugees from Persia begging that the Peace Conference grant their demands for repatriation, protection, indemnity, and the return of prisoners of war. They have designated as delegates to Versailles the Rev. Isaac Yonan of Urumia, with Paul Shimmon of New York as alternate.

To Break Jersey Deadlock.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 25.—A proposal to break the deadlock in the Assembly was made today by Assemblyman Hervey S. Moore, Republican, of Trenton, who suggests that the House should be placed under call on Monday night and continue in session until it has chosen a Speaker. He says the office logically belongs to the Republicans, and adds, "The people of the State of New Jersey elected a Republican Governor. Should the Governor die, or for any reason the office of Governor be vacated, the President of the Senate, a Republican, would act as Governor. Should anything happen to the Acting Governor, then the Speaker of the House of Assembly would be the acting Governor. Would it be proper for a Democrat to be the acting Governor under a Republican Administration?"

League Associations to Meet Today.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The French, British, American, and Italian associations advocating a League of Nations have decided to elaborate their plan for joint meetings. The first session will be held tomorrow and will be presided over by Léon Bourgois, the former French Premier.

Phones for Peace Congress Airplanes

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The airplanes which are carrying Peace Conference delegates and important documents between London and Paris are to be equipped with wireless telephones. This will enable the pilots to speak to one another while in the air and to receive weather reports and instructions from the ground.

SIGNAL CORPS CONFERENCE.

Inter-Allied Committee Holds Its Opening Session.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The Inter-Allied Wireless Telegraph and Signal Corps Conference convened here today at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The United States, Great Britain, France, and Italy are represented. Today's session was a preliminary one. The conference probably will continue for a week or ten days. The initial discussion of communications and signal problems was begun.

The Conference intends to co-ordinate and make available information gained during the war. The American delegates are Rear Admiral W. H. Bullard, Captain D. W. Todd, director of Naval communications, Commander M. F. Pramel and Lieutenant Commander E. G. Blakeslee.

GERMANY CUTS OFF RELIEF.

No Further Share in Funds for Those Who Will Not Work.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The German Government has given all communities authority to cease the distribution of relief funds to persons to whom work is offered but who refuse to accept it, unless they are able to furnish a good reason for not taking the jobs offered.

According to a wireless message received here today, this action was taken to counteract the bad conditions of the labor market.

FAVORS PERMANENT ECONOMIC ALLIANCE

Prof. Field Would Continue Allied Maritime Transport Council in Peace.

HE QUOTES LORD CECIL

Statistician Says Many Approve a Joint International Administrative System.

On the eve of his departure for London Professor James A. Field of the Department of Economics, University of Chicago, and Chief Statistician of the Allied Maritime Transport Council, declared that the organization created by the Versailles Interallied Conference should be made permanent.

"The armistice," said Professor Field yesterday "has foreshadowed the end of the Allied Maritime Transport Council as a war organization, and the Allies, after their brief experience of economic co-operation, must now decide whether the Transport Council and similar agencies are to be continued through the period of peace negotiations and whether such agencies, in modified form, may be serviceable as permanent forms of international co-operation. Opinions naturally differ on questions like these, but many persons have come to feel that the experience and goodwill that have resulted from international joint action are not lightly to be discarded.

"As Lord Robert Cecil has put it, the economic machinery which has been built up in time of war ought to be turned by the Allies to the uses of peace. His views have been echoed by statesmen of the other allied nations. There are not a few today who believe that the surest foundation of a real and workable League of Nations is to be found in the joint international administration of economic affairs, in which the war has helped us to recognize a common international interest."

The Council was organized in London in March, 1918. It was formed to investigate the resources of merchant shipping available to the Allies, to consider the demands of the Allies upon this shipping and to recommend to the Governments associated in the council a concerted shipping policy. The American representatives in the organization are Raymond B. Stevens, Vice Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, and George Rublee. The senior British delegate was Lord Robert Cecil, formerly Minister of Blockade and now the British adviser on the League of Nations idea at the Peace Conference. Associated with Lord Cecil in the council was Sir Joseph Maclay, British Shipping Controller. The French representatives are M. Clementel, Minister of Commerce, and M. Loucheur, Minister of Munitions. The Italian Food Controller, Signor Crespi, has been one of the Italian representatives, and with him, from time to time, have been Signor Bianchi, Italian Railway Director; General dell'Olio of the Munitions Ministry, Signor Villa, Minister of Marine, and other high officials.

According to Professor Field, the Council has kept a systematic record of the shipping available to the Allies, including careful reports of new construction, charters, and sinkings. In the bill for marine damage which Germany must pay, the computations will be made from the Council's records of losses and leases made for neutral bottoms.

One of the most important tasks of the Council has been the preparation of an International Import Program. This was designed as a purely war measure, but, as Professor Field pointed out, it will have a direct bearing should the Peace Conference carry out a report that importations might find consideration in the general scheme of the League of Nations. It was necessary, said Prof. Field, for the Council to gather in figures the exact resources in food, manufactured products and capacity of all the Allies. Then each nation specified what it needed most and, if the particular requirement could be met from the surplus of some other one of the Council's participants, the needed goods or food was shipped. In this way, the resources of the Allies were balanced one against the other, and the nations were not compelled to place reliance on neutrals for things essential to the conduct of the war.

"Among the special problems which confronted the Council," said Professor Field, "one of the most persistent and difficult was the supply of coal to France and Italy. The demand for coal in all the belligerent countries was abnormal. Railway facilities were overtaxed and congested. Unusually large quantities of coal had therefore to be carried to Italy directly by ship, through seas peculiarly menaced by submarines. The problem, already difficult, became acute when the German advance of March and April brought the Paris-Amiens railway line under fire and virtually cut off the coal-producing regions of the Pas de Calais. To meet this new emergency, without permanently diverting to collier service large ocean steamships indispensable for other work, was then and has remained a matter of great difficulty. However, by interallied co-operation the most urgent needs of Italy and France were met at the same time that the increased troop transport of last Summer was being maintained.

"More recently the Council was obliged to recommend an apportionment of the shipping prospectively available for 1919 between the transport of troops, the carriage of munitions, and the supply of food to Europe."

TALK OF KAISER'S RETURN.

Berlin Report Says Hohenzollerns Intend to Go to Germany.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—A Berlin dispatch to The Daily Mail under Friday's date says:

"A sensational special edition selling rapidly on the streets here maintains that the ex-Kaiser and his family intend to return to Germany as soon as the National Assembly has given the country a legal constitution."

BRITISH NAVY YARDS IDLE.

Work on New Ships Suspended Pending Decisions of Conference.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—Nothing is likely to be definitely settled as to Great Britain's naval program until after the close of the Peace Congress, according to Reuter's. In the meantime, orders have been given to suspend work on the construction of war vessels, including light cruisers, at all to the yards.

General Garibaldi Quits Army.

PARIS, Jan. 25. (Associated Press.)—General Giuseppe (Peppino) Garibaldi, grandson of the Italian patriot, passed through Paris today on his way to Italy after having given up command of the Italian division on the French front. He is taking advantage of the decree which allows all volunteers to return home, and is going back to civil life.

FOR QUICK DEMOBILIZATION.

Senator Reed Has No Fear of Large Labor Surplus.

An appeal for the immediate demobilisation of the American armies to lighten taxes and to return workmen to productive industries was made by Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, at the dinner of the Superintendents of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in the Hotel Astor last night. He expressed the opinion that quick demobilization would not cause a large surplus of labor or a period of unemployment because the demands of readjustment and reconstruction would furnish work for all.

One of the first things to be done, he said, was to restrain Government control of business and hand the management of their affairs back to American business men.

"Every time the Government has laid its hand unnecessarily on business it has tended to paralysis of its vitality and virility," said Senator Reed. "If you want to save the world from a great disaster get those American soldiers, or that raw labor, back to this country and give American business control again—and do it quick!"

Haley Fiske, Vice President of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company told of the increased business of the company and of its war work. One of the achievements of the agents during the war, he pointed out, was the selling of about $130,000,000 in War Savings Stamps and Liberty Bonds. Other speakers were John R. Hegeman, President of the Metropolitan; J. S. Phillips, State Superintendent of Insurance, and the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church.

HONOR POET'S MEMORY.

Speakers Recall That Burns Prophesied the Brotherhood of Man.

The Burns Society of New York held its annual dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria last night, the anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns. About 150 members and guests were present. Alexander R. Peacock, President of the society, acted as toastmaster. Toasts were drunk to President Wilson, King George, and to the memory of Burns.

"While this society is largely, indeed, mainly, composed of Scotsmen," President Peacock said, "we welcome all who possess the great passport of admission to such a gathering as this—an appreciation of the wonderful, immortal legacy left to the world by Robert Burns. It has been said that good Scotsmen usually make good Americans. It had been better said that good Scotsmen always make good Americans. From the days of Witherspoon and Alexander Hamilton down to the present day we believe there never has been a period when citizens of Scottish birth or Scottish ancestry have not exercised their hands and their brains in the interest of this Republic and her liberties."

Andrew McLean, who followed Mr. Peacock, touched on many interesting points in the poet's history, and emphasized the prophetic insight shown by Burns in forecasting the future Brotherhood of Man. Other speakers were Major J. A. Belton, John Foord, and James Kennedy, the latter a former President of the Burns Society.

SAVE BOYS FROM DROWNING

Pelham Bay Reserve Sailor Rescues Four from the Bronx River.

Bertram Reed, a Pelham Bay reserve, dived into the Bronx River yesterday 150 feet north of the Bronx Park boathouse and rescued four boys who had broken through thin ice. Ralph Loumice, 11 years old, of 265 Atlantic Avenue, and Rastus Boxtale, 11 years old, of 300 Atlantic Avenue, were taken to Fordham Hospital for treatment, while Edward Boxtale, a brother to Rastus, and Otto Salter, 13, of 302 Atlantic Avenue, the Bronx, were able to go home.

Alexander Mosuki, 8 years old, who tumbled from the deck of the Health Department boat Rutherford, was saved yesterday off the foot of Metroptian Avenue, Brooklyn, by three men who braved the cold water of the East River to make the rescue. The boy lives at 140 North Eleventh Street, Brooklyn. The men who made the rescue were Frank Arnold, 160 Lorimer Street; William Herman of 229 Kent Avenue, and Edward Nevins of 151 India Street, Brooklyn.

FINE SPEEDING GUARDSMAN.

Court Finds That Militiamen Are Amenable to Civil Law.

Members of the New York Guard, except when Federalized or acting under riot orders issued by the Governor, are liable to the civil law when they overspeed in the city, decided Magistrate W. Brüce Cobb yesterday in the Traffice Court. As a result of his finding, Vernon L. Madden, of 311 Second Avenue, a member of the First Field Artillery, paid a $50 fine as a second offender, although Major Robinson Leech, of the Guard, announced that an appeal would be taken.

Madden was arraigned on complaint of Motorcycle Policeman Werner E. Mosher, who said that the guardsman had operated a cycle-car along Broadway, between 138th and 141st Streets, on Dec. 16, at forty miles an hour. Madden declared that he had not overspeeded, but added that any acceleration in his speed had been on order of Captain Reginald C. Knickerbocker of the First Field Artillery. Major Leech, who acted as counsel, contended that Madden was merely carrying out a military order. Magistrate Cobb decided that war emergencies did not apply to the operations of the State militia at this time.

BERNE MEETING PUT OFF.

Socialist and Labor Conference Now Scheduled for Feb. 2.

BERNE, Jan. 24.—The opening of the International Socialist and Labor Conference has been postponed to Feb. 2, it was announced tonight. Arthur Henderson, the British labor leader, started for Paris today to see Arthur J. Balfour, the British Foreign Secretary, and probably also to confer with American and Belgian peace representatives. It was said here during the day that Kurt Eisner, the Bavarian Premier, was coming from Germany to take part in the conference.

The absence of American representatives at the conference has caused much comment among the delegates now here. Camille Huysmans, the Secretary of the Socialist Internationale, was outspoken in criticism of the State Department at Washington for withholding passports from Americans who wished to attend the conference. When it was suggested that William English Walling and Charles Edward Russell were already in Europe, M. Huysmans replied: "They are no longer representatives of the American Socialists because they have broken with the party."

So far the countries represented include Great Britain, France, Russia, Germany, Ukrainia, Esthonia, Livonia, Georgia, Finland, Poland, German-Austria Belgium, Sweden, Italy, Denmark, Norway, Greece, Switzerland, Argentina, Armenia, Spain, Portugal, Bohemia, Armenia, Spain, Portugal, Bohemia, Hungary, and Bulgaria.

Russia will be represented by M. Axelrod, M. Bienstock, and M. Thoupav; Denmark by J. P. Nielson, Nina Kiefer, and Evers Bramshaan; Holland by Pieter Troelstra and M. Wibault; Greece by Deputies Courial and Bennarays Karamojis; the Majority Socialists of Germany by Hermann Mueller, Otto Weis, and Richard Molkenbuhr; Bulgaria by Minister Sakosoff, and Hungary by Minister of Education Kunfi.

Jews Name Americanization Day.

The Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society has designated Washington's Birthday as "Americanization Day for Jewish Immigrants." There will be meetings in Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Seattle, and in Yokohama, Japan, where Jewish refugees are gathered on their way to America. There will also be meetings in 700 other cities in which the society is represented by national Directors, to intensify the loyalty and devotion of Jews to the country in which they hav found a refuge and to bring home to immigrants the necessity for complete Americanization.

Boulder to Honor Soldier Dead.

OSSINING, Jan. 25.—A thirty-ton memorial boulder to be placed in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery to commemorate the thirty-eight men lost by the 1st Provisional Regiment, N. Y. N. G., while guarding New York City's aqueducts during the war was delivered in Tarrytown today. The rock was brought from Benticous Crag in the Shawangunk Range of the Catskills, and on it will be placed a bronze tablet with the names of the members of the regiment who died in service. There were over 8,000 individuals in the regiment during the war, of whom about 3,000 were from Manhattan and the Bronx and 1,000 from Brooklyn and Long Island communities.

Francis Has Recovered.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The State Department was advised today that David R. Francis, Ambassador to Russia, who is at London, had recovered from a recent operation, and that he would visit Paris before returning to this country.

TALK OF KAISER'S RETURN.

Berlin Report Says Hohenzollerns Intend to Go to Germany.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—A Berlin dispatch to The Daily Mail under Friday's date says:

"A sensational special edition selling rapidly on the streets here maintains that the ex-Kaiser and his family intend to return to Germany as soon as the National Assembly has given the country a legal constitution."

BRITISH NAVY YARDS IDLE.

Work on New Ships Suspended Pending Decisions of Conference.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—Nothing is likely to be definitely settled as to Great Britain's naval program until after the close of the Peace Congress, according to Reuter's. In the meantime, orders have been given to suspend work on the construction of war vessels, including light cruisers, still in the yards.

General Garibaldi Quits Army.

PARIS, Jan. 25, (Associated Press.)—General Giuseppe (Peppino) Garibaldi, grandson of the Italian patriot, passed through Paris today on his way to Italy after having given up command of the Italian division on the French front. He is taking advantage of the decree which allows all volunteers to return home, and is going back to civil life.

FOR QUICK DEMOBILIZATION.

Senator Reed Has No Fear of Large Labor Surplus.

An appeal for the immediate demobilization of the American armies to lighten taxes, and to return workmen to productive industries was made by Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, at the dinner of the Superintendents of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in the Hotel Astor last night. He expressed the opinion that quick demobilization would not cause a large surplus of labor or a period of unemployment because the demands of readjustment and reconstruction would furnish work for all.

One of the first things to be done, he said, was to restrain Government control of business and hand the management of their affairs back to American business men.

"Every time the Government has laid its hand unnecessarily on business it has tended to paralysis of its vitality and virility," said Senator Reed. "If you want to save the world from a great disaster get those American soldiers, or that raw labor, back to this country and give American business control again—and do it quick!"

Haley Fiske, Vice President of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company told of the increased business of the company and of its war work. One of the achievements of the agents during the war, he pointed out, was the selling of about $130,000,000 in War Savings Stamps and Liberty Bonds. Other speakers were John R. Hegeman, President of the Metropolitan; J. S. Phillips, State Superintendent of Insurance, and the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church.

HONOR POET'S MEMORY.

Speakers Recall That Burns Prophesied the Brotherhood of Man.

The Burns Society of New York held its annual dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria last night, the anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns. About 150 members and guests were present. Alexander R. Peacock, President of the society, acted as toastmaster. Toasts were drunk to President Wilson, King George, and to the memory of Burns.

"While this society is largely, indeed, mainly, composed of Scotsmen," President Peacock said, "we welcome all who possess the great passport of admission to such a gathering as this—an appreciation of the wonderful, immortal legacy left to the world by Robert Burns. It has been said that good Scotsmen usually make good Americans. It had been better said that good Scotsmen always make good Americans. From the days of Witherspoon and Alexander Hamilton down to the present day we believe there never has been a period when citizens of Scottish birth or Scottish ancestry have not exercised their hands and their brains in the interest of this Republic and her liberties."

Andrew McLean, who followed Mr. Peacock, touched on many interesting points in the poet's history, and emphasized the prophetic insight shown by Burns in forecasting the future Brotherhood of Man. Other speakers were Major J. A. Belton, John Foord, and James Kennedy, the latter a former President of the Burns Society.

SAVE BOYS FROM DROWNING

Pelham Bay Reserve Sailor Rescues Four from the Bronx River.

Bertram Reed, a Pelham Bay reserve, dived into the Bronx River yesterday 150 feet north of the Bronx Park boathouse and rescued four boys who had broken through thin ice. Ralph Loumice, 11 years old, of 285 Atlantic Avenue, and Rastus Boxtale, 11 years old, of 300 Atlantic Avenue, were taken to Fordham Hospital for treatment, while Edward Boxtale, a brother to Rastus, and Otto Salter, 13, of 302 Atlantic Avenue, the Bronx, were able to go home.

Alexander Mouski, 8 years old, who tumbled from the deck of the Health Department boat Rutherford, was saved yesterday off the foot of Metroplitan Avenue, Brooklyn, by three men who braved the cold water of the East River to make the rescue. The boy lives at 140 North Eleventh Street, Brooklyn. The men who made the rescue were Frank Arnold, 160 Lorimer Street; William Herman of 229 Kent Avenue, and Edward Nevins of 151 India Street, Brooklyn.

FINE SPEEDING GUARDSMAN.

Court Finds That Militiamen Are Amenable to Civil Law.

Members of the New York Guard, except when Federalized or acting under riot orders issued by the Governor, are liable to the civil law when they overspeed in the city, decided Magistrate W. Bruce Cobb yesterday in the Traffice Court. As a result of his finding, Vernon L. Madden, of 311 Second Avenue, a member of the First Field Artillery, paid a $50 fine as a second offender, although Major Robinson Leech, of the Guard, announced that an appeal would be taken.

Madden was arraigned on complaint of Motorcycle Policeman Werner E. Mosher, who said that the guardsman had operated a cycle-car along Broadway, between 138th and 141st Streets, on Dec. 16, at forty miles an hour. Madden declared that he had not overspeeded, but added that any acceleration in his speed had been on order of Captain Reginald C. Knickerbocker of the First Field Artillery. Major Leech, who acted as counsel, contended that Madden was merely carrying out a military order. Magistrate Cobb decided that war emergencies did not apply to the operations of the State militia at this time.

BERNE MEETING PUT OFF.

Socialist and Labor Conference Now Scheduled for Feb. 2.

BERNE, Jan. 24.—The opening of the International Socialist and Labor Conference has been postponed to Feb. 2, it was announced tonight. Arthur Henderson, the British labor leader, started for Paris today to see Arthur J. Balfour, the British Foreign Secretary, and probably also to confer with American and Belgian peace representatives. It was said here during the day that Kurt Eisner, the Bavarian Premier, was coming from Germany to take part in the conference.

The absence of American representatives at the conference has caused much comment among the delegates now here. Camille Huysmans, the Secretary of the Socialist Internationale, was outspoken in criticism of the State Department at Washington for withholding passports from Americans who wished to attend the conference. When it was suggested that William English Walling and Charles Edward Russell were already in Europe, M. Huysmans replied: "They are no longer representatives of the American Socialists because they have broken with the party."

So far the countries represented include Great Britain, France, Russia, Germany, Ukrainia, Esthonia, Livonia, Georgia, Finland, Poland, German-Austria Belgium, Sweden, Italy, Denmark, Norway, Greece, Switzerland, Argentina, Armenia, Spain, Portugal, Bohemia, Hungary, and Bulgaria.

Russia will be represented by M. Axelrod, M. Bienstock, and M. Thoupay; Denmark by J. P. Nielson, Nina Kiefer, and Evers Bramshaen; Holland by Pieter Troelstra and M. Wibaut; Greece by Deputies Courial and Bennaroya Karamolis; the Majority Socialists of Germany by Hermann Mueller, Otto Weis, and Richard Molkenbuhr; Bulgaria by Minister Sakosoff, and Hungary by Minister of Education Kunfi.

Jews Name Americanization Day.

The Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society has designated Washington's Birthday as "Americanization Day for Jewish Immigrants." There will be meetings in Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Seattle, and in Yokohama, Japan, where Jewish refugees are gathered on their way to America. There will also be meetings in 700 other cities in which the society is represented by national Directors, to intensify the loyalty and devotion of Jews to the country in which they have found a refuge and to bring home to immigrants the necessity for complete Americanization.

Boulder to Honor Soldier Dead.

OSSINING, Jan. 25.—A thirty-ton memorial boulder to be placed in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery to commemorate the thirty-eight men lost by the 1st Provisional Regiment, N. Y. N. G., while guarding New York City's aqueducts during the war was delivered in Tarrytown today. The rock was brought from Benticque Crag in the Shawangunk Range of the Catskills, and on it will be placed a bronze tablet with the names of the members of the regiment who died in service. There were over 8,000 individuals in the regiment during the war, of whom about 3,000 were from Manhattan and the Bronx and 1,000 from Brooklyn and Long Island communities.

Francis Has Recovered.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The State Department was advised today that David R. Francis, Ambassador to Russia, who is at London, had recovered from a recent operation, and that he would visit Paris before returning to this country.

SHOOTS TWO OTHERS, THEN KILLS HIMSELF

Bertram R. Ripley of Newark Dead, Wife and Nephew in Critical Condition.

WAS WELL-KNOWN ATHLETE

Thought to be Demented Over Failure to Enter Army During the War.

Bertram R. Ripley, 43, a wealthy retired lumber dealer of Newark, is dead from a self-inflicted bullet wound, and his wife, Mrs. Marion Ripley, and a nephew, Sergeant Maitland Petri, a member of the Marine Corps, whom he shot, are in the Presbyterian Hospital in Newark in a critical condition.

The triple shooting occurred yesterday in the home of Ripley's mother-in-law, Mrs. Marion Doremus of 27 Lincoln Avenue, Newark. No explanation could be given for Ripley's act other than his apparent demented condition brought on by brooding over his failure to enter military service during the war.

According to the statement of Mrs. Doremus, there was no discord when the family left the breakfast table. Her daughter and Petri, who lives at Point Pleasant, N. J., and who is home on a furlough, went to the library from the breakfast table, and Ripley went upstairs. Mrs Ripley was reading a morning paper and Petri a letter from his mother when Ripley came down and entered the room. What happened in the library after Ripley entered is not known. A shot was heard by a maid in an adjoining room. Mrs. Ripley was seen running past the room followed by her husband, who fired a shot at her. She fell to the floor. After shooting his wife Ripley shot himself in the left temple and fell beside a fireplace. It is believed that the first shot heard was fired at the nephew.

Petri after being shot made his way to the second floor, where he was found when the police arrived. He was wounded in the abdomen. Mrs. Ripley is suffering from a wound in the chest. The three were taken to the hospital, where Ripley died a few hours later.

Bertram Ripley was a grandson of David Ripley, founder of David Ripley & Sons Lumber Company, Newark. His father, Charles Ripley, was a member of the firm, and when he died he left the bulk of his fortune to Bertram and another son. Bertram sold out his interests in the firm about five years ago and retired. He was once a noted oarsman and the amateur bicycle champion of the State. His wife was the daughter of Wilbur Doremus of the firm of Macknet & Doremus of Newark.

DENIES ASKING COMMISSION

Trainor's Counsel Promises "Startling" Evidence, but It Is Rejected.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Charges that Milton J. Trainor of Chicago, a civilian employe of the War Department, attempted to obtain a commission of $100,000 in connection with plans for the construction of the Chicago Speedway Hospital, were vigorously denied today by E. D. Adcock of Chicago, counsel for Trainor, at a hearing before the Senate Buildings Committee. Trainor is expected to appear in his own behalf next week.

Adcock told the committee that the charge that his client had sought the commission from Edward S. Hines of Chicago either was made deliberately without regard to the truth, or recklessly. In asking that the inquiry be deferred until Monday, Adcock said evidence as startling as that in the Lorimer case would be developed, and in refusing his request the committee announced that reference to the Lorimer matter would not be permitted to go into the record.

William Bennett, counsel for Hines, read from the record of the Lorimer investigation to show that the charge that Mr Hines had raised $100,000 for the election of Lorimer to the Senate had not been sustained.

COURT FREES O'DONNELL.

Self-Styled Murderer Released on District Attorney's Motion.

Patrick O'Donnell of 69 Lexington Avenue, Manhattan, who in a "confession" said he murdered Marie Riddell near her home in Glen Morris, was set at liberty yesterday by Magistrate Ilyle in the Jamaica Police Court on motion of District Attorney Denis O'Leary of Queens County.

Mr. O'Leary said an exhaustive investigation had failed to reveal sufficient evidence on which to hold O'Donnell. After his discharge O'Donnell declined to make any statement further than to say that he did not commit the murder.

UNEMPLOYED FAIL TO MEET.

Smashing of Soapbox Only Excitement at Madison Square.

The only visible evidence of a mass meeting of unemployed in Madison Square yesterday, called as a result of a gathering on Wednesday night in the People's Forum, 70 East Fifteenth Street, was the arrest of a man for distributing literature, the destruction of a soapbox by the police, and a talk by Ellis O. Jones to newspaper reporters. Jones was arrested and sent to Bellevue Hospital after a meeting he called in Central Park on Dec. 13 last to "mourn for liberty." He was discharged later.

The police of the East Twenty-second Street Station, under Captain Post, were on hand yesterday, but had little to do. Though thousands of workers went through the park in the afternoon only a few lingered. It was nearly 2 o'clock when Jones appeared. While he was being questioned by Captain Post a young man got up on the box at the Twenty-sixth Street side of the park. He was pushed back and the box was reduced to splinters.

"Things have happened here this afternoon that are too subtle for the police or the reporters," Jones told the newspaper men. "I consider this a most significant meeting. There have been actions taken here that look more favorably to our cause than I would like to discuss."

This talk ended the "meeting." I. W. W. pamphlets were distributed, one bearing the title, "Help Stamp Out Capitalism" and calling upon employes to rise against their employers. Another circular invited discharged soldiers and sailors to attend a meeting in the People's Forum.

A man who said he was Louis Wepner, 29 years old, 32 Attorney Street, was arrested by Patrolman McLoughlin of the East Twenty-second Street Station for distributing handbills to passers-bys. The prisoner was taken to the East Twenty-second Street Station and locked up on a charge of distributing circulars without a license. He said he had been in this country seven years, but was not a citizen.

Under the heading of "Liberty Now" the poster displayed an article reprinted, it was said, from a magazine article of Jan. 18 last.

RELATIVES TO BE INFORMED.

Military Hospitals Will Notify Them About Soldiers in America.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Relatives of the sick and wounded soldiers admitted to military hospitals in the United States will be advised of the whereabouts and condition of the patients at the time of admission, under a plan soon to be put into operation by the War Department.

Combined with the order issued by General Pershing to the men overseas to write home, it is believed by War Department officials that the plan will give relatives prompt information as to all wounded or sick men.

Hospitals in this country, it was announced, would be required to send cards reporting immediately to the nearest of kin when a soldier is admitted, what his wound or ailment is, and his general physical condition. Transfers of men from one hospital to another also will be reported.

POLICE TO HAVE AIR SQUAD.

Col. Thompson to Form Unit—Noted "Aces" Asked to Join.

A volunteer aviation unit, which will be a part of the Police Reserve of the city, will be organized at once, said Colonel Jefferson De Mont Thompson, recently appointed to head the Police Air Service, following a conference yesterday at the Aero Club of America.

The aviation section will be recruited on the army basis, with twenty officers and twelve pilots, and enlisted men enough to fill out a full aero squadron. Colonel Thompson said he had invited the following American aces to join the squadron:

Lieut. Col. William Thaw, 5 victories; Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, 26 victories; Major James A. Meissner, 8 victories; Major Cushman A. Rice, 10 victories; Lieutenant Lansing C. Holden, 7 victories; Lieutenant Howard Brodick, 6 victories, and Lieutenant F. M. Symonds, who downed 5 enemy planes.

At the Aero Club it was said last night that other cities would be asked to follow New York's example.

Our Cruisers to Visit Santos.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Jan. 25.—Edwin V. Morgan, the American Ambassador, has announced that the American cruisers Denver, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh, under command of Admiral William B. Caperton, will arrive at Santos on Feb. 1 to remain a week. The officers and men will be permitted to visit Sao Paulo.

WARNS AGAINST ANY CUT IN WAGES HERE

Secretary of Labor Wilson Fears Social Upheaval if Scale Is Lowered.

THE DANGER OF UNREST

Senator Lewis Asks Support of President's Ideals at Lawyers' Club Luncheon.

Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson issued an appeal to the business men of America yesterday to get their organizations going and keep them going throughout the readjustment period. At the same time he warned that if there was any broad attempt on the part of the employer to force the wage scale down the labor organization, which have grown stronger with the war, will meet such action with a resistance of sufficient strength to frustrate it.

He also warned that if America experiences any long period of industrial unrest there is no telling where the resulting social upheaval will lead us and as two of the possible eventualities he mentioned the French Revolution and the Bolshevism of Russia.

The Secretary made his plea at a luncheon in the Lawyers' Club, which was tendered by that body in honor both of Mr. Wilson and Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, who had come to New York to speed an American industrial commission on its way to Europe for a survey of industrial conditions there. In the course of his address Secretary Wilson reviewed the activities of the Department of Labor during the war, and said in part:

"The principal reason for our entering the war was for the maintenance of our institutions, so that we might have the opportunity of working out our own destinies without the interference of the mailed fist of the Kaiser. Many of the workers of the country thought that the war was a capitalistic war, and it was our duty to point out that what's over defeats there were, we have the most perfect democracy established on the face of the globe.

The Post-War Swing.

"We now have to turn our attention to the problem of reconstruction. There has been a great deal of hysterical talk about that. It is the same kind of an atmosphere as we experienced when we entered the war. It was said then that we would not be able to organize quickly enough, that we would not be able to train, equip, transport, and maintain an army of sufficient magnitude to meet the military necessity, but it was this same army of boys that the people said we could not train and equip, who, when the Hun broke through the battle line to a point within thirty miles of Paris, stepped in and hurled the German army back toward Berlin.

"The same spirit that dominated the American people during the war must thrill them during the period of reconstruction. We now face the demobilization of our war industries and their work and the readjustment to a post-war basis. If every man would realize that he should get going, and established on the same basis as before the war, this problem would be simplified. Many think this unwise because of present war prices, the costs of materials, and the cost of labor, and that the thing to do is to wait until prices go down. That would be unwise. My vision of the situation is that there will not be more than a four or six months' interval between the signing of the armistice and getting into the post-war swing.

"My reasons for this are that in all lines of industry there has been a depletion of stocks. Shelves are empty and have to be filled to a normal business weight, and the supply of labor is not ample, as some are prone to think.

"There is a shortage of 3,200,000 laborers, and there is not only a possibility of a shortage of labor, but a possibility of an increased demand for labor. If we tide ourselves over the readjustment period, I feel that there will be eight to ten years of great industrial activity in this country.

"If there is any attempt to force down wages unduly, it will be met with a resistance of sufficient strength and duration to frustrate it, and in this connection I want to say that if we have any great period of industrial unrest, there is no one who can tell where the resultant social upheaval will leave us. We may have a revolution such as the French Revolution, or we may have the Russian Bolshevism.

"That is hard to tell, but if the principle of accepting the will of the majority is not taken, the condition that brought about our war with Germany will continue to exist—that condition is autocracy. Democracies are slow to remedy evils within them. It was the idea of the German Emperor that power was supreme. My appeal to you is, get your business going and keep it going."

Senator Lewis asked the lawyer to get squarely behind the President and uphold his fourteen points at the Peace Conference. He said those points were not the work of the President alone. He reviewed the correspondence between President Wilson and Germany that led up to the proposal of the fourteen points, and deplored the recent questioning of more than one of them. He said that if one of the points was abandoned all might as well be done away with.

Senator Lewis's Speech.

"Germany," Senator Lewis said, "would have the right to refuse to abide by the terms of the armistice, the Allies would be justified in withdrawing from the peace table, and all small nations or aspiring peoples fighting with the United States on the basis of the President's proposals would be excused before the world in turning from America.

"The peace was made by Germany and her people on terms of fourteen points proposed by the United States, including the proposal of a league of nations for future peace. These were adopted by the Allies as their only terms of peace and all accepted as the basis by Italy, the Balkans, and Turkey.

"It is impossible for the United States to withdraw one of her terms or postpone one or omit to press one—without giving Germany the right then and there to refuse to abide by the terms of the armistice in any particular. She could refuse to deliver her cannon and arms as agreed. The people of Germany would be justified in charging us with fraud on them and turn against us and support any force against our soldiers. The Allies would be justified in accusing us of trickery and withdraw from the table.

"Every little nation or aspiring people fighting with us on the basis of our proposals made on Jan. 8, 1918, would be excused before the world in turning from us and assailing us for perfidy to them. Then resenting it by allying themselves with any foes of the United States—this on the ground that our contracts and agreements were delusions and a fraud and our treaties of peace but 'scraps of paper.' We would be the perfidious traitors to solemn compacts and the one nation whose word would sink as low as was that of Prussia when her deceptions and lies brought her to destruction in the indignation of civilization.

"The very last and first of the covenants we made to Germany as basis of peace, was that all nations qualified as civilized should league to prevent war in all future. This was the one principle on which the German people took our terms of peace and withheld further arms and armies to Germany. It was on this basis as the guaranty of future peace in Europe that Britain and France accepted the terms of the United States.

"On this one rock we built our house. To this house come all the nations. Can we now violate the honor of our household and prove ourselves in word of nation another Imperial Prussia? It is now a question of American honor. It cannot be violated to accommodate political party issues or to gratify racial or national hatreds. Justice demands that we hold fast to every covenant and upon our plighted faith for which our sons died that the word of nations should ever be holy—for this we pledge the vow of sacred Peter:

"'On this rock we build our house—and the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it.'"

Captain A. B. Carpenter, R. N., who was the last speaker, was the leader of the British Navy in its successful attack on the mole at the harbor of Zeebrugge. He said that any suggestion that the German should be dealt with in kindness should be choked in its beginning, as Germans were brutes and not worthy of kindness. He said there was no truth in the reports that there is anything but cordial friendship between Great Britain and this country, and that together both countries would provide the best means of preserving the peace of the world.

SEES BIG LABOR PROBLEM.

Unemployment Increasing in State, According to Dr. Kirchwey.

The Governor's Reconstruction Commission, which organized on Friday night, held its first business session yesterday morning in the City Hall. It was addressed by Walter Lindner of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, a member of the Advisory Council of Real Estate Men. The members were then entertained at luncheon at the Bankers' Club, 120 Broadway, where Dr. George W. Kirchwey, New York State Director of the United States Employment Service, spoke.

He said that labor conditions were steadily growing worse in this State, and through the discussion which followed it was revealed that in Buffalo Albany, Troy, and Cohoes the situation would soon become extremely acute if something were not done immediately to induce the employers to refrain from discharging or locking out their employes.

After Chairman Abram I. Elkus had designated the Chairmen of the committees, announced on Friday to act with five members at large as an Executive Committee, and Alfred E. Marling, President of the New York Chamber of Commerce, had been made Chairman of the Committee on Taxation and Retrenchment in place of George Foster Peabody, who had asked to be relieved, the commission decided that the next meeting of the whole body should be held in Buffalo on Feb. 8.

The Real Estate Burden.

In line with what Governor Smith had said at the organization meeting on Friday night, Mr. Lindner pointed out the fact that all officials realized the burden on real property could not be increased, as at present it was bearing all it could stand, and any further tax would have to be passed on to the rent fund of the occupant.

The Advisory Council of Real Estate Men, he said, favored an exact limit of the impost on real estate with a classified income tax as the source from which to obtain the money that is needed and must be raised.

"The scheme of the council," he continued, "is being prepared for introduction as a bill in the Assembly. It proposes a classified rather than a graduated tax, for personal earnings should bear the smallest percentage. As far as possible I should tax the earnings of corresidents on business transacted in this State. All administration should be by the State authorities and not by local or municipal bodies."

After luncheon at the Bankers' Club Dr. Kirchwey opened his talk with a request for all possible assistance from the commission and an offer of every kind of help he could give. "The situation is serious," he said, "for the amount of unemployment is steadily increasing. For instance, three weeks ago Buffalo reported 8,000 out of work, while yesterday the number had risen to 25,000. While the proportion is not the same throughout the State, it is true that it indicates what is taking place in other industrial communities.

"It has been said that there is no real unemployment problem—that there are as many jobs as men. The Emergency Fleet Corporation, which has a force of 400,000 men, will need 100,000 more during the coming year. The Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, needs a great many men, and the Government construction work at Hampton Roads will require many more, but at best these instances are but very small drops in the large bucket of unemployment. Much of this unemployment is voluntary, as the men are not eager to come back to their old jobs, or even to jobs closely resembling the old ones, and the war workers who have been thrown out of employment by the closing down of munition plants are not anxious to go back to the old wages. So there are many men walking the streets looking for better jobs.

"I have a keen sympathy for such men. The soldier boys who went away have not returned. Instead, we have men who discovered in themselves qualities which they did not imagine they possessed, which perhaps most of us possess, but of which the ordinary conditions of life do not make us conscious. They have learned self-sacrifice and heroism and obedience. So they do not want to be offered the old desolating job. They desire one which will give them the opportunity to put to the test those qualities. They will not wait long enough to bring them to the point of starvation, but the condition is serious because of the dissatisfaction and unrest it involves.

Soldier Not a Docile Creature.

"The means which the Government has just taken to meet the situation, that of allowing the soldier to remain in the army until he finds a job, is likely to become to him a Greek gift, for I have yet to meet the soldier who could wait until the Government demobilized him. He is not a docile creature, and he wants what he deserves. More than that, he has before him the dangerously contagious example of some European communities that have a direct way of going about getting what they want.

"We are in no danger of what it has become the fashion to call Bolshevism, but I do say that if we should get to the point where there was as much unemployment as there was on the two previous occasions when this country was confronted with similar conditions, there will be ten times as much disorder. The nation is confronted with an emergency, an emergency which threatens with suffering and hardship those people who have sacrificed themselves for it, and those people are entitled to aid in recuperation from the war just as much as they were entitled to the leadership of the Government in carrying on the war."

At the close of Dr. Kirchwey's address, Mrs. Sarah A. Conboy emphasized the points he had made by telling the commission that within a few days in Cohoes alone, 30,000 textile workers would be thrown out of employment because the employers absolutely refused to concede the forty-eight-hour week, whereas the forty-four-hour week had already been granted to the clothing workers in New York City.

Edward P. Doyle, Chairman of the Budget Committee of the New York Real Estate Board, presented to the commission a memorial, which said in part:

"The Real Estate Board of New York is not concerned in the matter of new sources of revenue. The board had made suggestions and is prepared to consider favorably any other suggestion that is just and equitable, but it insists that before any additional tax is approved by the Legislature a law be enacted limiting the tax on real estate in the City of New York to 2 per cent., or 33 1-3 per cent. of the net income from real estate. To impose additional burdens on any form of wealth without reducing the burden on real estate would be absolutely wrong and unjust.

"The State and City Governments should be reminded of their ante-election pledges of economy, and if given new sources of revenue it should be only after real estate has been relieved. The war is over. We are rapidly returning to normal conditions, such as obtained in 1915, when the city budget, less the amount appropriated for tax defiencies, was only $192,000,000. With a 2 per cent. tax rate real estate will contribute in 1920 $170,000,000, certainly all that it should in reason be asked to contribute.

"The evil effect of overtaxation can be seen in the assessed valuation of the Borough of Manhattan. In 1914 $5,149,250,760; in 1918, $5,094,001,238, and this in spite of the great number of new and highly valuable buildings erected since 1914. The tax rate on real property must be limited to a rate not exceeding 2 per cent."

SECRETARY DANIELS HERE.

Will Deliver Address at Italy-America Victory Celebration Today.

Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, arrived in New York from Washington at 9 o'clock last night, accompanied by Mrs. Daniels. From the Pennsylvania Station they went directly to the Ritz-Carlton. Secretary Daniels made the trip from the capital to attend the victory meeting to be held this afternoon at the Metropolitan Opera House under the auspices of the Italy-America Society. He will deliver the principal address.

At the hotel last night Secretary Daniels said he had been very so busy in the department that he had found it impossible to devote more than passing attention to other matters. So pressing are the demands upon him, he said, that he will return to Washington soon after the delivery of his address this afternoon.

WOULD END ESTIMATE BOARD

County Clerk Schneider Suggests 9 Elected Members in Its Place.

The Cleveland Democracy included in its list of guests for its regular annual dinner at the Savoy last night as many women as men, and the women paid as much attention to the political speeches as their escorts. Charles F. Murphy sat on the dais and listened, with signs of interest, when County Clerk William F. Schneider, leader of the Cleveland organization, suggested that the present Board of Estimate was outworn. After praising the Administration of President Wilson and pledging loyalty to him, Mr. Schneider said:

"Can the gentlemen in Albany who voted in favor of the ratification of the prohibition amendment say that a majority of the people of the State, or a majority of each legislator's constituents, really wanted him to favor ratification? It is a momentous question—one striking at the very foundations of that most precious possession of a free people personal liberty."

Mr. Schneider said that the Cleveland Democracy had always stood for the rule of the majority, and that while he was convinced that the service rendered by the city's traction companies could not be worse under any ownership, yet the people themselves should determine whether the railroads should become a public charge or whether the companies themselves should be compelled by vigorous laws to furnish the service demanded by the public health and comfort.

Mr. Schneider stated that in his opinion the necessary clerk in the city's service was the poorest paid employe in the world, that these employes were resigning at a rate which threatened the city's welfare, and that few persons can now be found willing to enter civil service examinations. Concerning the need of a change in the management of the city's financial affairs, he said:

"I believe the Board of Estimate has outlived its usefulness. There seems to be a decided lack of confidence on the part of the public in its work, and a proneness to complain of the conduct of officials on the ground of failure to meet the public needs. There has been but little change in the methods of the board since the Greater city was created and I am sure that a board of nine members elected at large would give better service at a cost very little, if any, in excess of the cost of the present board."

Nebraska Suffrage Law in Effect.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 25.—The State law, giving woman partial voting rights, operation of which had been suspended for nearly a year by efforts of anti-suffragists to have the suffrage act submitted to a referendum, went back into effect today. The law became effective when a decree was issued in District Court, making permanent a temporary injunction, enjoining submission of the suffrage act to a referendum vote. Anti-suffragists will appeal the case, it was announced.

DIX SOLDIERS FORM FORUM.

Gives Opportunity to Enlisted Men to Voice Their Views Publicly.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMP DIX, N. J., Jan. 25.—A Soldiers' Forum, the first in any American army camp, was opened this week at Camp Dix and will be the first organization through which the enlisted men will have an opportunity to express themselves freely on subjects that interest the man in the ranks. Enlisted men compose the committee which will select subjects and speakers, and State Senator Harold B. Wells will be the first speaker to appear before the forum at its formal opening on Wednesday night.

"Going Back to Civilian Life—How?" will be Senator Wells's subject, and following his address the matter will be open for discussion. Each soldier will be limited to three minutes.

Current topics of interest to the soldier will be taken up at the regular sessions of the forum, which will be held every Wednesday evening at the Mole Tequot Soldiers' Club of the War Camp Community Service. Director William Jackson of the War Camp Community Service here was largely instrumental in organizing the forum, although soldiers needed no encouragement when the matter was presented to them.

RECREATION AT HOSPITALS.

Red Cross and Surgeon General of Army Will Co-operate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Plans for co-operation between the American Red Cross and the Surgeon General of the Army in providing recreational activities in forty reconstruction hospitals were announced here tonight. Dr. Elbert K. Fretwell, of Columbia University, in charge of the undertaking, has started on a tour of hospitals on the Atlantic seaboard where wounded soldiers are being nursed back to health.

Facilities of the Young Men's Christian Association, American Library Association, and similar organizations will be utilized in providing indoor games, athletics, books, gardening materials, and everything calculated to improve the mental and physical condition of the men under treatment.

Barely 50 Alien Women Interned.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Less than fifty enemy alien women were interned during the war, it was disclosed today by the Department of Justice. Most of the women are being transferred to special barracks at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and instructions have been issued to treat them with particular courtesy. Heretofore they have been confined in institutions about the country. None has been in jail.

OGDEN TAKES LAST SHOOT OF SEASON

New York A. C. Gunner Breaks 98 Out of 100 Targets at Travers Island.

CLUB CUP FOR TAYLOR

Wins Third Leg on Trophy, While Haslin Cup Is Captured by G. S. McCutcheon.

January shooting at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club came to an end in a blaze of glory yesterday. Forty-seven gunners, the largest field of the year, took part in the shoot. The conditions were ideal and as a result, there was an unusually large number of excellent scores made by the Nimrods. Two gunners had the splendid total of 98 out of a possible 100 targets in the shoot for the high scratch prize. W. B. Ogden, a member, won the trophy. A. H. Winkler, the other to have the excellent total, was a visitor and simply shot along for targets only.

Being the final Saturday of the month, both the Haslin and the Club cups came to an end. In each event, legs were scored by the nimrods who had full scores of 25 targets. G. S. McCutcheon was one of the gunners to score on the Haslin Cup. It gave him his third leg on the trophy, one more than any other gunner. Naturally, he took home the prize.

J. C. Taylor turned a similar trick in the shoot for the Club Cup. He won his third leg yesterday, which allowed him to become the permanent owner of the prize. The Accumulation Cup also came to an end. The trophy has been up for the past three months. Although he did not win a leg yesterday, E. D. Anderson won the prize with four legs scored during November, December, and January. Anderson also was the winner of the Travers Island Cup, the take home trophy of the day. The High Handicap Cup went to J. C. Taylor after the usual shoot off.

DELANEY WINS FOR N. Y. U.

Although Ill, Violet's Centre Aids in Defeating Union Five.

Ed Delaney, New York University's centre, got into the basket ball game with Union College last night on the University Heights court just in time to swing the tide of battle in the Violet team's favor. N. Y. U. was victorious by a score of 31 to 24. Delaney, who contracted an illness on the N. Y. U. team's recent New England tour, literally left a sick bed to replace Hauser at centre.

Despite his weakened condition, Delaney led his team-mates in a series of effective passing plays, which astonished the Schenectady five and resulted in a N. Y. U. victory. Delaney's accuracy in shooting was another big factor in reversing the score. He accounted for six field goals in the second half.

The first half ended after N. Y. U. had put up a brilliant battle from the start, with the Union representatives in front by a count of 13 to 8. Delaney's entrance into the game in the second half put a different complexion on the score.

The lineup:

N. Y. U. (31)	Position.	Union. (24.)
Martin	R. F.	Bruckner
Holman	L. F.	Cassidy
Hauser	C.	Hanley

Substitutions—For New York University—Delaney for Hauser; Steinburg for Holman. For Union—Wilbur for Bruckner; Korngrut for Rinaldi. Referee—Ed Therp, De La Salle Institute. NAVY SWIMMERS FIRST.

Easily Defeat Johns Hopkins Natators by Score of 41 to 9.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 25.—The midshipmen made a good start in their swimming season by defeating Johns Hopkins in the local tank this afternoon, 41 to 9. They won the relay and took first and second places in four of the other five events.

Hopkins's only first was that of Reins in the back stroke, and his victory over Bowen Borden of the navy was a narrow one. Gallagher of the navy took a two-yard over Gould, Johns Hopkins, in the relay, and this was just held by the other swimmers.

Walker Defeats Gilday.

Archie Walker, former Irish-American A. C. amateur boxer, furnished a surprise last night in the New York A. C. special tournament when he scored decisively over Walter Gilday of the Union Settlement A. C., in the third round of the final bout, in the 125-pound class. Other victors were: 120-pound class—Mike Arrow, Quick Step A. C.; 135-pound class—B. Friebaum, Clark House A. A.; 140-pound class—H. Epstein, Rutgers Place Gymnasium.

Blumenthal Wins at Thum's.

COLUMBIA FIVE LOSES.

Penn Plays Uphill Game and Wins by 31 to 18.

Columbia got off to a poor start in the Intercollegiate Basket Ball League series, when it was defeated by the University of Pennsylvania five by a score of 31 to 18. The game was played in the Columbia Gymnasium on Morningside Heights before one of the largest crowds that has turned out in several years.

Columbia played in whirlwind fashion in the first half, sweeping the Quakers off their feet and leading at the end of the session by a two-point margin, the score standing at 12 to 10. The Pennsylvanians made only one goal for the period and were saved from utter rout by the fine shooting of foul tries by Sweney, who made eight in a row. Columbia, on the other hand, made five goals from the field in this period, to which were added two points made by Farrell from the foul line.

But the Blue and White was unable to hold the pace in the second half, and the Quakers, taking advantage of loose guarding and poor following of the ball on Columbia's part, quickly overcame the home team's lead and forged ahead to win a comparatively easy victory. The Philadelphians broke through Columbia's crumpled defense for eight baskets, four of them going to Danny McNichol, the newest of the Quakers' basket ball stars.

The only untoward incident of an otherwise fast and clean game came in the second half, when Johnson, Columbia's negro centre, and Peck, a Quaker guard, lost their heads and exchanged blows under the Columbia basket. Both men were quickly separated by other players and officials, and the incident was closed when the two were banished for the remainder of the game.

The lineup and summary follow:

Pennsylvania. (31.)	Position.	Columbia. (18.)

STUYVESANT WINS SCHOOLBOY TITLE

Courtois Is Star Performer in High School Indoor Championship Meet in Brooklyn.

Athletes of Stuyvesant High School carried off the championship banner last night in the annual high school indoor track and field championships, held under the auspices of the Public Schools Athletic League at the 23d Regiment Armory in Brooklyn. These youngsters compiled a total of 33 points, nine better than was earned by the representatives of De Witt Clinton High School, who finished second. Boys' High School of Brooklyn was third with 11 tallies.

P. Courtois was the all-important factor in the Stuyvesant victory. Courtois took the 100-yard high hurdle race from a select field of rivals in 15 4-5 seconds; won the running high jump with an effort of 5 feet 8½ inches, and finished third in the twelve-pound shot-put, with a heave of 37 feet 5½ inches. Courtois's performance in the high jumping contest was the most meritorious of the evening. He equaled the record of 5 feet 8½ inches, made in 1909.

A crowd of about 3,000 spectators, including schoolmates, mothers, fathers, and relatives of the competing youngsters, attended the meet. This assemblage witnessed a number of sterling performances, in which close finishes on the track were the rule rather than the exception. One of the most convincing victories of the night came in the half-mile run, in which Kabelitz, of De Witt Clinton High School, after leading from the start, crossed the finish line about fifteen yards ahead of his nearest rival, Allen, of Stuyvesant High School.

The one-mile race was another interesting competition, but a blunder on the part of the judges caused a halt in the chase when the field still had one lap to cover to complete the distance. Because of this mistake no time was taken. Allen of Stuyvesant High School was the leader when the race was prematurely finished, and he was given credit for a victory.

Special to The New York Times.

The visitors were unable to break through the army's strong defense until well along in the second half, after the soldiers had rushed all their substitutes onto the floor.

The second round game scheduled between Walter Merrill Hall, winner of the tournament last season, and Arthur S. Cragin went to the latter by default.

CHARITY BALL ON FEB. 7.

Annual Event of 62 Years is Reminiscent of Old New York.

The annual Charity Ball is always reminiscent of old New York, and the city has been transformed almost completely in sixty-two years, when the first ball was held in the Academy of Music. This season it is to be held on Feb. 7 at the Waldorf-Astoria.

A ticket to the ball, held on March 3, 1857, at the Academy of Music, invites the guests to be on hand at 8 o'clock. Nowadays the big society balls are hardly under way before 11 o'clock. In 1857 society thought it was quite a drive uptown, in their horse-drawn carriages, to the Academy of Music, and the formal quadrille was the most popular dance.

The grand march is a relic of those days, when crinoline made round dancing most difficult. The returning officers and soldiers of the civil war attended in large numbers after peace was declared, and hundreds of the army and naval officers who participated in the world war are to attend the ball next month.

The ball is given for the benefit of the Nursery and Child's Hospital. Mrs. Edward J. Berwin is President of the ball, and Mrs. Algernon Sydney Sullivan, who has led the grand march for many years, Honorary President. Henry Gansevoort Sanford is Chairman of the Floor Committee this year.

MUSIC

By James Gibbons Huneker

An All-American Program.

When a masterful piano artist like Josef Hofmann devotes an entire program to living American composers the result is bound to be interesting. And it was interesting yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, where an audience greeted with well-bred enthusiasm several of the numbers. It was a contention of the late Edward A. MacDowell that the native-born composer should take his or her chance among European composers and not be "coddled" on separate programs, thus confirming the phrase and the opinion of Mr. Krehbiel. But Mr. Hofmann thought otherwise, and he played a pleasing though not profound scheme, and if there are any composers still alive today who were present at this concert it is because there is no heart disease in the history of their families. Hofmann made of the veriest trifles sonorous shapes of beauty. His tone-color was ravishing. It would be dangerous to criticise his selection; for, as Henry James has pointed out, it is always a risk to ask an artist why he selects any particular theme for treatment. That should be the poet's secret. This holds good in the Hofmann case. He played what he liked because he liked it. That's the story in a nutshell. He might have given us less salon music and fewer pretty decorations, but it may be added that no matter what he would have offered the result would have been the same—beautiful.

Despite the monotony of the composers' moods, the occasional sameness in tonality, the performance of the Only Josio was in the key of the superlative. He began in with a Prelude and Fugue by Clayton Johns, well constructed, well sounding, and not unlike the E minor Fugue of Mendelssohn; for the organ, the dignified polyphony of Mr. Johns is well adapted. You hear the pedal octaves. But Mendelssohn. Followed this a Schumannesque fantasie, "Restless, Ceaseless," by Rubin Goldmark, a pupil of Antonin Dvorak at Jeannette M. Thurber's National Conservatory. This poetic piece gives little idea of the scope of Mr. Goldmark's great gifts. With the exception of Horatio W. Parker, he was the most distinguished name on the program; a master of the orchestra and larger forms. Edward Royce, the son of the late Professor Josiah Royce of Harvard, was represented by two compositions, an Interlude and "Joyance," which last named showed latter-day influences, the whimsical toying with a mood, the "new" dissonances, the unexpected ending, leaving the hearer in midair. Amusing, clever, if not original. Daniel Gregory Mason, of a family in American musical history, had the honor of having six pieces from his "Country Pictures" wonderfully interpreted. Yet, two would have been enough. "Cloud Pageant" and "Chimney Swallows," or perhaps "Night Wind," with its patches of Debussy coloring.

Reginald De Koven's "Romance" is Chopinesque; possibly the key-signature D flat made us dream o fthe "Rain-Drop" prelude. But Parker's "Valse Gracile" won the first encore of the afternoon, swift, graceful, in the salon manner of Liszt or Moszkowski. "Birds at Dawn," by Fannie Dillon, was also encored. The bird hopped from the Debussy twig twice as the tiny carillon abruptly ceased. Pretty music, if inconsequential. Then, as if to show us that he could do the double notes "stunt" of De Pachmann, the pianist rippled off a study of great technical difficulty by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach called "Fire-Flies." Mrs. Beach has written more serious music, but this caprice is peculiarly effective. It is a pendent to Chopin's G sharp minor étude.

The sonata, opus 20, (manuscript,) by Alexander McFayden, was evidently intended as the pièce de résistance after all the whipped syllabubs and salon sentiment. It thundered loudly in the index and we thought of Schumann's Symphonic Studies, but the vigorous theme soon petered out into futile passage-spinning. The Romance sounded like Rubinstein, a broad cantilena and sweetly melodic. The Scherzo, however, aroused our hopes. Full of meat, rhythmic urge, and well planned, it proved the best of the four movements; the allegro maestoso is the Schumann of either the "Davidsbundler" or the massive march-like finale in D flat of the Symphonic Variations. A sonata is as sweet by any other name, and the various sections of this ambitious work are neither cognate nor affiliated. A suite would be a better ascription. A marked talent has Mr. McFayden, and he writes in the idiom of the keyboard. He has, too, a well-developed admiration for MacDowell.

We had longed for something essentially American in this program, the dynamic spirit which is ours, but it was not there. The most American composition of the afternoon was "The Star Spangled Banner," and its music was penned by an Englishman. Talent, fancy, brilliancy, erudition, taste are in all this American music, but individual profile was absent. Let's hope for better luck next time. An extra recital was played by Mr. Hofmann whose encores began with Liszt, modulating into Chopin's first valse, the Cradle Song and—but stop, Chopin is not an American composer. We must repeat our old belief: there is no map music, there is only good music. Mr. Hofmann deserves the gratitude of the native composer for his labor of love.

Mabel Garrison as Lucia.

Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" was sung for the first time this season at the Metropolitan Opera House last night, and Mabel Garrison made her début in the title rôle. There was artistic singing throughout, for Martinelli was the Edgardo, De Luca the Ashton. Miss Garrison was nervous in her first scene though it was temporary; the huge audience in its desire to testify its admiration almost spoiled the climax of her aria. However, this charming girl with the lovely voice took on courage and when her great scene a faire arrived she did not disappoint us. The mad scene—though it is the sanest music ever written for a soprano larynx and an intelligent flute—was beautifully sung. A legato like velvet, a crystalline staccato, trills, leaps, rapid runs, variations in chiroscura—the entire battery of a skilled coloratura singer was utilized, while the musical quality and the dramatic vraisemblance were never absent. Miss Garrison was applauded by one of the big houses of the season. Her success was a brilliant one.

Mr. Martinelli was in splendid vocal condition, and he acted with great fire. The sextet went well, but was not repeated despite the enthusiastic demand for it. De Luca, the artist ever, was in voice and his dramatic assumption appreciated. Leon Rothier, Minnie Egener, Bada, Paltrinieri completed the cast. Signor Papi conducted. The chorus was capital. There is enough melody in one act of "Lucia" to float an entire opera such as "La Reine Flammette." And what bully old tunes they are.

Caruso, Hempel, and Scotti sang again to a sold-out house in "L'Elisir d'Amore" at the opera yesterday afternoon, making, with last night's "Lucia" a record of two capacity audiences for Donizetti in a day.

Damrosch Talks and Plays Wagner.

Walter Damrosch told an audience of all ages at the third of the Symphony Concerts for Children held yesterday morning in Aeolian Hall that the trumpet calls in Wagner's "Tannhäuser" march meant the entrance of great personages, such as were now arriving at the Peace Conference in Paris, "or, to bring it home to ourselves, it is like a greeting to father and mother, the heads of the family, coming down to breakfast in the morning." The children and their elders enjoyed both Mr. Damrosch's talks and the music, which also included David's "The Rain," a waltz from Delibes's "Naila," Meyerbeer's march from "The Prophet," a symphonic bit from Saint-Saëns, and a 'cello solo by Willem Willeke.

LESS GOLD IS HELD BY RESERVE BANKS

$1,200,000 Decrease and Drop of $1,500,000 in Cash Reserves Reported for the Last Week.

MORE WAR PAPER ON HAND

Increase During the Week Totals $151,200,000—$47,800,000 Gain in Earning Assets.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Substantial increases in the holdings of discounted and purchased bills, apparently in connection with the Jan. 16 issue of Treasury certificates, and further reduction in the volume of Federal Reserve note circulation are indicated in the Federal Reserve Board's weekly bank statement issued as at the close of business on Jan. 24.

Total holdings of war paper increased $151,200,000, the banks at New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and San Francisco reporting large additions under this head. All other discounts on hand went up $9,500,000, while bills bought in the open market show an increase of $10,900,000, New York alone showing an increase of $9,200,000 in the holdings of this class of paper.

The decrease of $123,800,000 in the holdings of Government short-term securities is due largely to the redemption by the Government of temporary Treasury certificates held by the New York bank. Total earning assets show an increase of $47,800,000.

Government deposits show an increase of $97,400,000, while member bank deposits declined $70,500,000. Net deposits because of the small or "float" carried by the banks show an increase of $87,150,000.

The week saw a decrease of $1,200,000 in gold reserves and of $1,500,000 in total cash reserves.

Because of the large increase in net deposits, only partly offset by the reduction in Federal Reserve note liabilities, the banks' reserve percentage shows a decline of from 52.8 to 52.2 per cent.

Federal Reserve agents report a further decrease of $39,400,000 in the total of Federal Reserve notes outstanding. The banks show a total of $2,466,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation, a decrease for the week of $16,500,000. For the past four weeks the decrease in Federal Reserve note circulation amounted to $218,700,000, or at the rate of $54,000,000 per week—aggregate liabilities of the banks on Federal Reserve Bank notes in circulation increased $1,600,000, and are at present $128,800,000.

Increase in capital and surplus of existing members, also payment for Federal Reserve Bank stock by newly admitted members account for the increase of $510,000 in paid in capital, the New York and San Francisco banks reporting the largest increase under this head.

HOLD MORE U. S. BONDS.

Member Banks Also Report Gain in Holdings of War Securities.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Larger holdings of war securities, following the Jan. 16 issue of about $600,000,000 of Treasury certificates, and corresponding gains in Government deposits are shown in the board's weekly statement of condition on Jan. 17 of 765 member banks in leading cities.

United States bonds other than circulation bonds on hand show an increase of $26,900,000. For the New York City banks a reduction of $9,100,000 in bond holdings is noted. Treasury certificates on hand went up by about $166,000,000, the New York City banks alone reporting additional holdings of $87,000,000 and the banks in all Federal Reserve Bank cities an increase of $126,700,000. Loans secured by United States war obligations increased $16,900,000. For the New York City banks an increase under this head of $24,600,000 is noted. Other loans and investments show a decline of $4,700,000, the decline being somewhat larger for the New York City banks.

Holdings of United States war securities and war paper aggregate $3,474,200,000 and constitute 25.1 per cent. of the total loans and investments of all reporting banks, as against 23.9 per cent. the week before. For the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve cities increases from 25.4 to 26.0 per cent. and for the New York City banks an increase from 28.5 to 30.2 per cent. are noted.

Aggregate increases of $159,700,000 in Government deposits, and further concentration of these deposits in the Federal Reserve cities are shown. Net demand deposits increased by $5,800,000, while time deposits went up by $37,700,000.

For the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve cities the ratio of net deposits to investments, because of the large gain in Government deposits, shows a rise from 85.1 to 85.6 per cent. For the New York City banks an increase of this ratio from 89.7 to 90.9 per cent. is noted. The ratio of aggregate reserve balances and cash to total net deposits of the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve cities shows a decline from 15.7 to 15.2 per cent. For the New York City banks a corresponding decline of this ratio from 18.3 to 15.8 per cent. is seen.

Excess reserves of the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve cities work out at $82,300,000, compared with $78,900,000 the week before. For the New York City banks an increase of this item from $59,600,000 to $67,100,000 is noted.

$200,000,000 FOR ROADS.

Post Office Bill Also Appropriates $850,000 for Airplane Service.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Besides recommending salary increases for virtually all postal employes, the Post Office Appropriation bill, as reported today by the Senate Post Office Committee, proposes appropriations of $200,000,000 during the next three years for construction and maintenance of roads.

To the House bill, which carried $357,782,000, the Senate committee added the bill of Chairman Bankhead to appropriate $50,000,000 this year and $75,000,000 each for 1920 and 1921 for road work. The amendment also would provide $3,000,000 each year for roads in national forests.

In revising the House bill the Senate committee made an increase from $300,000 to $850,000 in the appropriation for postal airplane service, authorizing the Postmaster General to establish new routes and to secure airplanes from the War Department.

The House appropriation for exemption of parcel post "farm to consumer" express routes was reduced from $1,000,000 to $300,000.

A new committee amendment would authorize the Postmaster General to contract for pneumatic tube service in New York City and Brooklyn and prohibit removal of tubes in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and St. Louis until Congress could legislate on the tube question.

In providing employes' pay increases the committee added an amendment to increase the per diem allowance for railway mail clerks from 90 cents to $2 per day. Appropriations for rural route and city letter carriers were increased, respectively, from $31,500,000 to $68,800,000 and from $41,000,000 to $50,500,000. The House increase of 20 per cent. in pay of rural carriers on standard routes was raised to 25 per cent. Pay increases for Inspectors, Assistant Postmasters at first and second class offices, Superintendents of mail and delivery, clerks, watchmen, and other employes also were approved.

HINES SEEKS CO-OPERATION

Wants "Helpful Understanding" with State Railroad Commissions.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Director General Hines tonight gave out a statement saying "now that the nation's transportation functions are no longer primarily war functions, it is of great importance to invoke to an increasing extent the aid of the State commissions."

He added that as soon as Max Thelen assumed his position as head of the new Division of Public Service of the Railroad Administration, Feb. 1, an effort would be made to work out "a clear and helpful understanding with the State commissions."

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

More Concerns Announce Curtailment in Production.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 25.—Davis Daly is another of the copper mines to announce curtailment of production. This company finishes the year with approximately $500,000 in assets, much of it cash.

The Lake Copper Company will suspend operations for an indefinite period on Feb. 1. In the first nine months of its fiscal year, which ends April 30, the company produced about 900,000 pounds of copper.

Up to Jan. 14 Tuolumne had shipped seven cars of first-class ore from the main range mine. Two carloads, amounting to 105 tons, carried 10.4 per cent copper and 24 ounces of silver.

NEW SPRINKLER RULES.

Under Amended Act Installation Cost Will Be Cut in Half.

The amended rules covering sprinkler installations for fire protection adopted last week by the Board of Standards and Appeals are of general interest to owners in that they open the way to competition, which, it is estimated, will reduce the cost materially.

The amended rules go further in permitting use of a sprinkler head, adopted following satisfactory tests, which instead of merely deflecting water as the present sprinkler heads do, causes a swirling process which covers a much wider area. This advantage reduces the number of sprinkler heads required in a given area, and also eliminates approximately one-half the amount of piping required under the former rules.

It has been estimated that the cost to install a sprinkler system complying fully with the new regulations will be about one-half the present expense.

COPELAND STARTS NEW PLAN

Puts Industrial Hygiene Into Dr. S. Dana Hubbard's Hands.

Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner, announced yesterday that he had called into his office Dr. S. Dana Hubbard to start the work of the Division of Industrial Hygiene under the new plan which separates this division from the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, of which Dr. Louis I. Harris is director. Dr. Hubbard was instructed to investigate violations that are pending and to see that the proper corrections are made looking to comfort and health.

The action of Commissioner Copeland was the culmination of the proposal he made in a letter to his employes on Jan. 1, when he announced that it was his intention to withdraw the Division of Industrial Hygiene from the Bureau of Preventable Diseases. He was criticised by labor, social, and civic welfare organizations for his plans, and in reply said that his side had not been presented, whereupon he named last Friday as the day for a public hearing. The hearing was held and the representatives of the labor and other organizations continued their protest. The hearing was followed by the action of yesterday.

At the Free Synagogue Forum, 36 West Sixty-eighth Street, tonight there will be a discussion of "How Shall We Save Our Health Department?" by speakers representing labor, the church, and the synagogue.

VOTE FOR 8-HOUR WORKDAY.

Lawrence Textile Workers, However, Will Not Strike to Enforce It.

LAWRENCE, Mass., Jan. 25.—Textile workers of this city, at a mass meeting today, voted unanimously to support a movement to reduce working hours from fifty-four to forty-eight a week, without reduction in pay, effective on Feb. 3. Leaders explained that there would be no strike, but that the operatives would work eight hours daily and then quit their looms and benches, returning the next day.

How the manufacturers would meet this decision of the operatives was not known tonight. No general plan has been discussed among them, it is understood, and to date agents of only two mills have declared themselves on the subject. The Pacific Mills announced on Thursday a refusal of the forty-eight-hour week proposal. The Lawrence Duck Company notified its employes today that it would shut down if the forty-eight-hour week were insisted upon. Approximately 25,000 operatives are employed in the mills here. The products include cottons, woolens, and worsteds.

The mass meeting today was under the auspices of the General Committee of Lawrence Textile Workers, which includes representatives of the United Textile Workers of America branches of the American Federation of Labor, and the International Mule Spinners' Union. City Hall, where the meeting was held, was crowded.

James R. Menzie, President of the Central Labor Union, who presided, said that the eight-hour day would be out of date in a few years, as a standard of fewer hours was coming. He argued the need of reducing working hours on the ground of beneficial effect on the individual worker and as a partial solution of the problem of unemployment.

Thomas R. McMahon, Vice President of the United Textile Workers of America, told the meeting that the forty-eight-hour movement was decided upon as a means of "offsetting a movement by the mill owners to cut wages."

"This movement is not a local affair," he continued. "It is nation wide. It is not a strike. The word cannot be applied properly to the plans as proposed. The mills have been paying big dividends during the war. It is time now they should think of the workers. If they cannot run the mills under American conditions of pay, then the mills should be closed."

ARREST 20 STRIKE LEADERS

Agitators Accused of Interfering with Federal Court Order.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 25.—Twenty labor union officers and striking street car men were arrested and arraigned today before United States Commissioners on a Federal complaint charging conspiracy to hinder operation of street cars in interstate traffic and conspiracy to interfere with the injunction order of John C. Pollock, Federal Judge for Kansas, which placed operation of the Kansas City, Kan., cars in the hands of the United States Marshal. The twenty defendants pleaded not guilty and bond was fixed at $5,000 in each case.

The union officers arrested are Frank O'Shea, Buffalo, N. Y., Vice President of the Carmen's Union; E. F. Michael, President of the local Carmen's Union; Mrs. Sarah Green, President of the Women's Trade Union League and business manager of the Waitresses' Union; Jerry Burnett, district organizer for the Carmen's Union, and Charles B. Nelson, Secretary of the Central Trades and Labor Union.

GARMENT WORKERS RETURN

Peace Made by the Union with Some Employers.

Benjamin Schlesinger, President of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, forecast yesterday a gradual settlement of the strike of 35,000 members of the union against the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association, when he announced that about 2,000 workers would return to their machines on Monday morning under settlements made with independent manufacturers.

"Yesterday the union began to make settlements with firms who have agreed to the 44-hour work week, a 15 per cent. increase in wages, and other union conditions," said Mr. Schlesinger. "Beginning Monday all settlements will be made at the Stuyvesant Casino, 140 Second Avenue. More than 400 applications have been received by the Settlement Committee, and a number of these came from members of the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association. The Wholesale Dress Sellers' Association, an organization of jobbers, and the Dress Contract Manufacturers' Association, represented by Abraham Levy as counsel, will have conferences with the union on Monday afternoon. The Contractors' Association claims to have about 500 members and to employ about 10,000 dressmakers."

In newspaper advertisements appearing this morning the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association assert that the union is misleading the public as to sanitary conditions prevailing in the various shops of the association. The advertisement points to the report of the Joint Board of the Sanitary Control made last Monday as a refutation of Benjamin Schlesinger's statement in a letter to the Mayor that the shops "have serious fire dangers, dirty walls, dirty ceilings, dirty water closets," &c., &c.

"On Jan. 21, 1919," says the advertisement, "upon the request of Governor Smith of this State and Chief Inspector Garnon of the Industrial Committee, made through Miss Frances Perkins, Dr. George M. Price, Director of the Joint Board of Sanitary Control, made a report of conditions in the dress and waist industry, in part as follows: 'The sanitary conditions in these shops (dress and waist industry) is certainly much superior to the shops in any other industry in Manhattan.'"

The association then states that the shops are inspected more frequently, are visited monthly by a visiting nurse, who makes an additional inspection, and also by a fire drill squad which is contracted for through the association for all the members of the association.

BOAT OWNERS ON STAND.

Argument on Harbor Workers' Demands to Come Up Tomorrow.

Owners of harbor craft virtually finished testifying upon wages and working conditions before the sub-committee of the National War Labor Board yesterday, and argument upon the demands of the workers for the eight-hour day and 25 per cent. increase in wages probably will begin before the entire War Board tomorrow afternoon.

A few witnesses for the boat owners and the Federal Railroad Administration will be heard by the sub-committee in the Board of Estimate Room in the City Hall at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, but it is expected that all this evidence will be in in time for the argument before the full War Labor Board to begin at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Counsel of the operators and the unions said they expected to complete their filing of evidence within a few hours.

Witnesses for the boat owners continued their efforts at the hearings yesterday to show that an eight-hour day on tugs and other classes of harbor craft, and especially those dependent for loading upon the labor of longshoremen, who work on an eight-hour plan, would be impractical. Henry M. Lee, who operates a fleet of lighters, said that a ten-hour day for the lighter men would conform to the eight-hour day of the longshoremen so that no time would be lost by the boats.

"An eight-hour day plan would be impossible," said Captain Robert S. Clark, tug master for the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad. "We could not make any time with the car floats and would be delayed with the freight. All our time would be taken up going around the harbor relieving crews."

Edward J. McClees, Chief of the Wage Bureau of the Railroad Administration in the Eastern Region, offered in evidence an official chart showing the comparative increase of wages and the cost of living in this city since 1908.

Witnesses also told of the proposal of the boat owners that a New York Harbor Conciliation Board, composedr of ten boat owners and ten representatives of workers, be constituted to settle all future controversies.

LARGE INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Washington Officials Find Conditions Getting Serious at Some Points.

SURPLUSES OF 210,000 MEN

Few Places in the Country Now Report Any Shortage in Labor Forces.

MANY OUT OF WORK HERE

Situation Up-State, in Western Mining Regions, and Pacific Coast Is Also Bad.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Official announcement was made today by the Department of Labor that the unemployment situation in many parts of the nation was rapidly "becoming serious" and that telegraphic reports received during the current week indicated that even less favorable conditions were to be expected. No mention was made of the part which the demobilization of the armed forces of the nation was playing in these developments, but other statistics published from time to time show that many of the soldiers and sailors who have returned to civil life are finding it difficult to obtain work.

The statement made by the Department is that the surpluses of labor reported during the last eight weeks reached 210,000. On Dec. 3 there was reported a shortage of labor of 34,000 and surpluses totalling 18,000. In the eight weeks during which the surpluses jumped to 210,000 the shortage, which occurred in districts where skilled labor, difficult to obtain, was in demand, were reduced to 12,000.

In summarizing the situation in New York State, the department says:

"Unemployment conditions throughout New York State are rapidly increasing. A surplus of labor is reported in every large city in the State. The surplus in Buffalo has increased from 12,000 to 13,000. New York City, Rochester, Syracuse, and Utica all report heavy surpluses. The surplus in Albany has increased from 3,000 to 4,000."

A somewhat similar report is rendered on conditions in New Jersey. It reads:

"Last week the supply of labor was reported about equal to the demand, with slight surpluses in Paterson and Elizabeth. This week surpluses of labor are reported in almost all cities. Trenton reports a surplus of 4,000."

Consistent Decrease in Shortages.

In its official summary of the general situation the Department of Labor says:

"On Dec. 10, 1918, 25 per cent. of the cities reporting on shortages and surpluses reported a shortage of labor, 12½ per cent. reported a surplus of labor, and 60 per cent. reported that the supply about equaled the demand. From that date on until the current week there has been a steady and consistent decrease in the shortages reported, while the surpluses have been steadily increasing. For the current week the percentage of offices reporting shortages has dropped to 11 per cent., the percentage reporting surpluses has increased to 44 per cent., while the cities reporting that the supply equals the demand has dropped to 45 per cent.

"The area of unemployment is spreading all over the country. Up to Dec. 21, only six States were reporting any considerable amount of surplus labor. During the current week twenty States reported a surplus. On Dec. 3, twenty-eight cities reported labor shortages and this number has been cut down in the current week to fifteen.

"On Dec. 3 there was reported a total shortage of labor of 34,000 and surpluses totaling only 12,000. During the following eight weeks this shortage was reduced to 12,000 while the surpluses reported reached the figure of 210,000."

The situation in various districts throughout the country is summarized as follows:

"New England.—In Connecticut the surplus over demand is increasing. Every centre except New Britain reports surpluses over demands with increasing unemployment. New Britain continues to report a slight shortage. It is hoped, however, that this condition of unemployment will continue only until the building trades resume, as a large proportion of the builders' hardware, which is made in this country, is made in Connecticut.

"In Massachusetts, Worcester reports a surplus of 6,000, as against a surplus of 5,000 last week. Lynn and Lawrence report surpluses. Boston and Springfield both report the supply about equal to the demand, although other reports indicate a large number of unemployed in Boston. In the State there is a surplus of about 3,000 boot and shoe workers, 700 factory hands, and 11,000 machinists reported.

"In Maine there is a surplus of shoe workers and woolen textile workers. Woodmen and shipbuilders are still needed, but the demand is lessening. In New Hampshire there is a slight demand for woodsmen, with supply and demand for other classes of labor about equal.

"Pennsylvania—Shortages are still reported in Pittsburgh and Scranton. The shortages in Harrisburg and Philadelphia have been wiped out and both cities report a surplus. Erie reports a heavy surplus.

"Ohio—The surplus in Cleveland of 40,000 has jumped to 55,000. Toledo reports a surplus of 10,000 and Dayton a surplus of 7,000. Cincinnati and Youngstown both report surpluses. Surpluses are reported in all centres except in Akron and Columbus, where the supply about equals the demand. The condition in Ohio seems to be steadily growing worse.

Heavy Surpluses in the West.

"Middle West—The surplus in Detroit of 25,000 reported last week has increased to 30,000. Grand Rapids, Jackson, and Flint all report surpluses. There is a demand for woodsmen and a heavy surplus of bookkeepers and clerks. Illinois reports surpluses at almost every point. The expected lay-off in Rock Island Arsenal will affect both Illinois and Iowa.

"In Indiana heavy surpluses are reported, except in boilermakers and machinists. Indiana reports a surplus of 4,400. Minneapolis, Minn., reports a surplus of 4,000. There is a surplus of high-class engineers, clerical help, and in the building trades. There is a slight demand for machinists.

"In the copper districts the conditions are serious. Copper producers are unable to market any considerable portion of their output, with the result that mines and smelters are being closed down and men laid off every day. Butte, Mont., reports a surplus of 10,000. In Arizona 125 mining companies are cutting down their forces, and a large amount of unemployment is all over the State.

"In Colorado the supply exceeds the demand for almost every class of labor. In Idaho and Iowa surpluses of both skilled and unskilled labor are indicated everywhere.

"In Nebraska alone the conditions seem to be more or less normal. Soldiers are receiving their old jobs back, and the situation is encouraging. There is a slight surplus of unskilled labor, but not enough to cause any uneasiness. In Oklahoma there is a surplus in the building trades and stove molders. In New Mexico there is very little demand for labor and some surplus of common labor.

Some Shortages in the South.

"Southern.—In Alabama there is some demand for miners and agricultural help. In Georgia there is some shortage in Atlanta and Savannah, but taking the State as a whole there is a surplus of all classes of labor. Savannah reports a shortage of mechanics and shipyard workers.

"Florida reports that the supply of labor exceeds the demand, with numbers of mechanics and machinists out of work. There are but few opportunities for labor in Florida except for agricultural workers, saw mill, turpentine, and common labor. Returning soldiers who are natives of the State will be taken care of, but a warning is issued that soldiers from other States are flocking there in larger numbers than conditions allow.

"Norfolk, Va., reports a shortage of 1,800, while Richmond reports a surplus. There is a surplus of clerical help throughout the State. Nashville, Tenn., reports a surplus of 2,000, without much change in other cities from last week. In Louisiana there is a demand for colored help, but a large surplus of white labor. In Kentucky the conditions are reported as generally poor. In Louisville, however, there is a slight shortage. There are slight shortages in Raleigh and Wilmington, N. C., with a surplus of semi-skilled labor in the cotton and tobacco mill industries.

"In South Carolina slight shortages are reported in agricultural and textile workers and in common labor. In Maryland there is a substantial shortage in Baltimore and some demand for miners throughout the State. In Delaware there is a small demand for laborers, machinists and shopworkers. Wilmington reports a slight shortage.

"Pacific Coast—Heavy surpluses are reported in San Francisco, Oakland and Los Angeles. San Francisco reports a surplus of 8,000. Laborers and returning soldiers seem unwilling to leave the city.

"The labor situation in Oregon, especially in Portland, is acute. Portland reports a surplus of 7,000. In Washington there is great unrest in the shipyards at Puget Sound, with a substantial surplus of workers over demand all over the State."

SUES OIL MAN FOR $600,000.

Von Hagen Alleges Instrument Invented by Him Located Wells.

Alleging that a radium instrument invented by Dr. Hugo J. von Hagen had been used successfully to locate oil wells from which more than $3,000,000 profit has been obtained by the user, Dr. von Hagen has filed suit in the Supreme Court against Karl J. Schumacher, said to be a buyer for the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, to recover a sixth interest in the profits. The complaint asks for $600,000, but demands an accounting of the sum earned by the defendant.

The complaint filed by Walter Carroll Low, attorney for Dr. von Hagen, does not describe the radium instrument further than to state that it has power to disclose the presence of oil underneath the ground wherever the instrument was used on the surface. Mr. Low said he could not speak of the instrument in detail, but explained that it is a small box equipped with a dial, about which a hand revolves.

"I have been told that if the instrument is carried on a train traveling at the rate of sixty miles an hour and the train passes over oil deposits the hand on the dial will wiggle excitedly," said Mr. Low.

Dr. von Hagen alleges that he made the agreement in May, 1917, by which Schumacher was to have the use of the radium instrument in locating oil wells for a sixth of the profits. Thereafter, he says, Schumacher used the box successfully in locating oil on twenty different tracts of land, aggregating 23,704 acres, throughout the United States. The tracts include, he adds, prospects near Hunter Station, Mucette, and Tienesta, Penn., the San Jacinto River in Texas, Madill, Okla.; Paola and Bluff City, Kan., and Tulsa, Okla.

Dr. von Hagen, who now lives in Atlantic City, has been interested in many mining enterprises. He is a graduate of Heidelberg and got his Ph. D. from Chicago University. He was for some years General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

BOND THIEF SENTENCED.

Clerk Who Took $10,000 of Liberty Issue Gets Long Term.

Judge McIntyre in General Sessions had thirty-five convicted prisoners arraigned for sentence yesterday. Alfred M. De Mott, 34 years old, of St. John's Place, Brooklyn, who pleaded guilty to stealing Liberty bonds worth $10,000 from Dominick & Dominick, 115 Broadway, was sent to Sing Sing for four to nine years and six months. Probation officers told the court that De Mott, who was a clerk for the bankers, with a wife and two children, had spent a large part of the proceeds from the bonds in extravagant entertainments in Broadway resorts. The Governors of the Stock Exchange sent this letter to Judge McIntyre, which he received before sentence was passed on De Mott:

"Owing to the prevalence of larcenies of Liberty bonds, members of the Stock Exchange feel that the public interests demand severe measures when the guilty persons are apprehended."

Among others sentenced were Jacob Deutsch, 17 years old, of 132 Second Avenue, to Elmira for attempting to extort $5,000 by sending threatening letters to William Guggenheim at 833 Tenth Avenue, and Frank Barbor, 18 years old, a chauffeur, of 417 East Seventy-fifth Street, thirty days in the city prison for injuring a child with his car. Most of the prisoners were petty offenders and were freed on suspended sentences under probation.

GEN. O'RYAN PLEADS FOR NATIONAL GUARD

Declares That Traditions of Regiments of 27th Division Should Be Perpetuated.

PRAISES NEW YORK UNITS

Commanding Officer Says Discipline, Esprit de Corps, and Pride of Home Made Them Superior.

A plea for the permanence of the 27th Division and of all the units composing the organization of the old New York National Guard Division is made in a statement sent to this country by Major Gen. John F. O'Ryan by Robert De Main Mountsier of the American Red Cross. General O'Ryan said he thought that all the traditions and designations of the 27th, the 107th Infantry, and all the other units in the division ought to be perpetuated in some way so that "in the next war" the units would be known by their same numbers.

"The factors that played the most important part in the accomplishment of the 27th Division in this war were, in my opinion, its discipline, esprit de corps, and locality sentiment and pride," said General O'Ryan. "Also to be considered are the high standard of intelligence and the physical fitness of the men in the division. All these factors and their results were welded together, so as to constitute a homogeneous machine, by really excellent staff work, and this in turn was the result not only of the individual training of the officers but of their relative permanency in their positions.

"The pride of organization, the respect for traditional honor, the affection for the unit, were factors that again and again stimulated the men of the 27th to do the things they did. They fought magnificently, gaining glory for themselves and their units. These units, when the war began, took new numerical designations. If there could be some guarantee that these designations would remain permanent, I feel sure that both officers and men, in view of what the division had gone through, would become greatly attached to them.

"One of the regiments of this division, the 7th New York Infantry, which, I think, is 108 years old, has been known in this war as the 107th. Even to us who know the units of the 27th Division so intimately, it has been a surprise that with all the change due to radical reorganization these units have transmitted and fused into the new men the traditions and spirit which they inherited from their regimental forebears.

Loyalty of New York Soldiers.

"When men are called upon to engage in an enterprise which may call for the supreme sacrifice they unconsciously dedicate their effort to some allegiance. Very largely will the intensity of their effort be affected by the character and hold upon them of that which they serve. In campaign and battle soldiers lead simple lives, and, seeking some tangible representation of the cause for which they fight, they are accordingly apt to centre their sentiments and emotions about their regiment and division. At the time the officers and men of the 27th Division entered upon the campaign they had attained a veritable state of exaltation in relation to their confidence in the division and the regiments composing it, and this was stimulated by the campaign and its results.

"In the matter of locality sentiment as a factor in what the 27th accomplished, it may be pointed out that in every command there is a certain percentage of absolutely fearless men, also a number whose nervous systems are such that they are greatly affected by the shock of battle. The remainder constitute the normal mass to be led in one direction or another as leadership, example, and discipline may determine. The constitutional defects of the nervous men are minimized by their greater fear of locality sentiment concerning their conduct, when the personnel of the unit all come from the same vicinity. A man dare not shirk when he knows that those about him who are depending upon him to play his part all come from the same locality and will report at home any failure on his part.

"If, on the other hand, he is a stranger in a strange unit, his home located in some other part of the country, this important deterrent is lacking. And so I believe that locality sentiment, individual and family pride, have played an important part in the battle manners of the division. We have not been troubled with skulkers, shirkers, and deadbeats in action.

Praises Old 7th Infantry.

"You ask me particularly about the 107th—the old 7th Regiment. It would be difficult adequately to characterize their record and accomplishment in this war without the use of superlatives. I wish to point out that this regiment since the Mexican border service has furnished many hundreds of officers to the United States Army. Again and again have the units of the division sent soldiers to the training camps as officer candidates. Almost in every case they were experienced noncommissioned officers.

"It is due to the 107th to say that the officer candidates furnished by them were particularly fine material. They were of good family, well educated, physically fit, well trained and disciplined. Everywhere in the army, from what I can learn, they have proved to be good officers. This division has furnished more than 1,000 officers, over and above its own requirements, to the army during the war. That record alone would justify all the effort of the past years in the development of the 27th Division.

WOMEN TO AID POLAR WORK.

Will Give Hospital Equipment to Roosevelt Memorial Expedition.

Women are to have their part in the Roosevelt Memorial Arctic Expedition which is to start by airplane for the polar regions in June of this year. The Aviation Committee of the National Special Aid Society, Mrs. William Allen Bartlett, Chairman, has just voted to contribute the complete hospital equipment and supplies for the expedition. This expedition will be financed by the Aerial League of America and be in charge of Captain Robert A. Bartlett, who was Captain of the S. S. Roosevelt in both of the Peary expeditions, and Commander of the McMillan Relief Expedition, &c.

The funds for this donation will come from the Treasurer and Trinket Fund of the society, which, working for the aviators of the United States Army, has raised nearly $100,000 to supply them with warm garments and other necessities and to aid their dependents in case of disaster. The women voted unanimously to make this gift to the expedition; it will be arranged with expert medical and surgical advice, and they may increase the gift when the cost of the equipment is learned.

EGAN WANTS KIEL CANAL NEUTRALIZED

Minister to Denmark Says German Militarism Is Still Dangerous.

SEES PROPAGANDA HERE

League for Political Education Joins Citizens' Committee to Welcome Troops.

Neutralization of the Kiel Canal to mitigate fear of the German Colossus, "not by any means a thing of the past," was urged yesterday by Maurice Francis Egan in telling the women members of the League for Political Education, at the regular Saturday morning lecture in Carnegie Hall, some of the things he heard in Copenhagen, "the whispering gallery of Europe," during the ten years he had been our Minister to Denmark.

"I think," added Mr. Egan, whose reply to the question was given as "an individual and not as a diplomatist," "that there can be no safety for Denmark until this is done."

The hope of Norway, Sweden and Denmark, as Mr. Egan read the future from the experience of the past, lies in a Scandinavian confederacy, which will be in effect a joint administration of foreign affairs, permit a benevolent supervision of the gate to the Baltic, and be an effective offset to German propaganda. Of propaganda, Mr. Egan said the Scandinavian countries, especially Sweden, had had plenty, and, turning the application of his subject from Sweden to the United States, he said:

"For the belief that the German militarism is dead, or that the German dream of a Hamburg to Bagdad railroad is abandoned, I have no sympathy. German propaganda, insidious and effective, is at work here as well as throughout the world. I want to warn you against too great a reliance in American honesty and integrity as proof against this propaganda. We must continue to fight 'the devil with his own fire,' and not remit any of our efforts to that end."

Mr. Egan obtained a vacation last May when he became ill in Copenhagen, due to overwork in connection with war problems, and yesterday his voice and his bearing suggested that he had not yet fully regained his strength. Frequently auditors, unaware that he had left a sick bed to make the address, interrupted him with calls of "Louder." He began by referring to the fact that he had been appointed to his post by the late Colonel Roosevelt, then President, whom he eulogized highly, terming him the "first of a new order of Americans." Recalling his friendship with the dead leader, Mr. Egan related how some time ago he was conferring with President Wilson in Washington, and somehow the name of Roosevelt came into the conversation. Mr. Egan said he turned to the President, saying:

"'Mr. President, it was Colonel Roosevelt who made it possible for you to be President.'"

The President, he added, replied:

"'Yes, it was he who opened the desk.'"

Mr. Egan discussed the diplomatic service. He declared that it was wrong, because it was based on the wrong principle, the political one. He said that any one who accepted a post in Europe was looked upon as one who had made a substantial contribution to the campaign fund. The speaker inferred that he had not found this handicap working in Denmark when he arrived, probably due to the intense democracy of the Danish peoples.

"When I left Copenhagen last May," he continued, "I found that the American public was determined to believe that the Scandinavian countries were tremendously pro-German. They are not. The great mass of the people are strongly pro-Ally and have been, with the possible exception of Sweden. The aristocratic Swedes, the upper classes as it were, have supported the German cause. The reason for this is that the upper class Swede is usually educated in Germany, and the Kaiser, no doubt, as part of the great propaganda campaign, always was quick to have Germany recognize any scientific attainment by a Swede. In Denmark the people do not like Germany, and of the many royalties I have met, the Queen of Denmark, despite her relationship to the former German Crown Prince, is very likely the least pro-German of all.

"I once made a great diplomatic 'mistake' in Copenhagen. Just before the sinking of the Lusitania, and shortly after von Bernstorff had published his warning to Americans not to take passage on the vessel, I entered into conversation with a Serene Highness, a Prussian. I happened to tell him that if the Lusitania was sunk and a single American life was lost it would mean war the next day.

"'Oh, my dear fellow,' was his reply, 'you know very well that your country, largely capitalistic and aristocratic, would hesitate long before going to war for the sake of 500,000 bourgeoisie.'

"When first I went to Denmark I was convinced that a great war never could come, because war had become too scientific. But when I lived in the shadow of the German Colossus I saw differently. King Christian once said to me, after the great war had begun, that he did not know but that he might wake some day to find himself in the position of King Albert of Belgium. My legation was a night's ride from Berlin, and we knew what it was to live in an atmosphere of uncertainty."

Discussing the question of Schleswig-Holstein, Mr. Egan commented bitterly on the failure of the nations to prevent the "German rape of Schleswig." He intimated that had a more firm stand been taken at the time of the arbitrary annexation it would have checked, perhaps prevented, the growth of the German state of mind which culminated in the great war.

CALL SOVIET MONEY MERE 'DIRTY PAPER'

Bolsheviki, by Issuing Billions of Rubles, Declared to Have Bankrupted Russia.

SOCIALISM A CATCHWORD

Observer Declares 95 Per Cent. of Russian Peasants Never Even Heard the Phrase.

Alexander A. Boublikoff, Minister of Railways in the First Provisional Government following the Russian revolution, speaking yesterday at a luncheon of the League of Free Nations Association at the Café Boulevard denounced the Bolsheviki for repudiating the debts of Russia and maintained that the tremendous issue of paper money by the Soviet Government had brought that Government to the verge of bankruptcy.

The Soviet Government is not collecting the taxes it levies because the people do not want to pay taxes and the Government issues more and more paper money to make up the deficits, said Mr. Boublikoff who declared that whereas before the war Russia had something like a billion and a half rubles in paper money, at present it has about 60 billions of rubles in paper money. He charged that the money issued by the Soviet Government has come to be nothing but "dirty paper," and added that when the people of Russia realize the financial plight to which the Bolsheviki have brought them they will know that their sufferings and sacrifices have been in vain.

"The imminence of bankruptcy will change the minds of the whole people," he continued. "Seeing that the Bolshevist régime is not to his interest the Russian will discard it. Before the revoluton not only were 95 per cent of the peasants not Socialists but they never heard of the word."

The meeting was in the form of a debate on Russia, and Santeri Nuorteva of the Finnish Information Bureau undertook to answer Mr. Boublikoff.

"If Russia is flooded with paper money then it must be understood as a fact that a large contribution to this money was made by the counter-revolutionists in this country, for they caused paper money to be printed here to flood Russia with nothing to back the issue," said Mr. Nuorteva.

"I do not believe that there are 60,000,000,000 of rubles in paper money in circulation in Russia. Nobody knows how much paper money there is, but I want to charge that the counter-revolutionists have circulated a great deal of paper money in order to kill off finance in Russia. But I may also say that the Soviets are trying to replace the paper money with assignations having labor value.

"The Russian peasant may know little of Marxism, but he knows pretty well what socialism is, and he knows what the class struggle means when the land he has is taken away from him by his oppressors. The Allies have done everything they could to retard the reconstruction of Russia."

When Mr. Nuorteva asserted that under the Soviets production in Russia was increasing, and declared that in Moscow eight factories were running above 30 per cent. of their capacity in the manufacture of agricultural implements he was interrupted by Everett P. Wheeler, a well known lawyer, who asked: "I want you to tell me how much money Mr. McCormick was paid when those factories were taken over by the Bolsheviki?" "I don't know and I don't care," was Nuorteva's reply, whereupon Mr. Wheeler exclaimed, "That's what they stand for—the Bolsheviki—they're robbers."

Those who explained the anti-Bolshevist view were Mr. Roublikoff, Dr. S. Ingerman, and General Oberoutchoff, Governor of Kiev under Kerensky. The ideas of the Bolsheviki were set forth by Mr. Nuorteva and Thomas D. Thatcher, a member of the Red Cross Mission to Russia. Moissaye Olgin, a Russian author, who called himself a Menshevik and anti-Bolshevist, though not on the program, took issue against those who presented the anti-Bolshevist viewpoint.

"Only a few days ago a Columbia professor explained to me that in your own glorious American revolution America faced the same calamity regarding the issue of paper money," said Mr. Olgin. "He told me of a man who actually had to pay $101 in paper money for a meal."

Mr. Olgin said he was opposed to the repudiation of the Russian debt. He said that the Russians will have to swallow the fact that they need capital to develop their country, and that interest will have to be paid on this capital, even though the Russians may be reluctant to work so that the interest may be paid to foreign capitalists. From paying interest on foreign loans it would be just a step to paying interest on domestic loans, he declared. He was of the opinion that the word socialism was used in the revolution only as a catchword to attract the attention of the people. Referring to the reported utterances of Serge Sazonoff, former Prime Minister of Russia under the Czar, that he would "refuse to sit at the same table with assassins," on learning of the Allies' policy toward Russia, Mr. Olgin declared: "And this man Sazonoff is one of those who call themselves democrats. This man who was happy enough to sit at the same table with the Czar; this man who was a consort of the notorious Stolypin and other arch reactionaries; this man, friend of Stolypin, who put Breshkovskaya in jail, now declaims he will not sit at a table with assassins. This shows the kind of democrats we have in Russia asking the Allies to support each of them with armed forces."

Dr. Ingerman protested against the Bolsheviki "in the name of socialism." He called the Soviet form of government a "negative democracy, without civilization, science, arts, culture, or humanity."

TELLS HOW WAKIVA SANK GIANT U-BOAT

Men on Harkness Yacht, Converted Into Warship, Won Honors and Saved Convoy.

ONE OF THE WAR'S DUELS

Great Submarine's Conning Tower and Periscope Both Hit by Wakiva's Shells.

The United States ship Wakiva, which was formerly the yacht of Harry S. Harkness, who died on Thursday, sank a giant submarine of the U-131 class after one of the most desperate naval duels of the war, near Belle Isle, France, on Nov. 28, 1917.

The Wakiva, a boat of 1,600 tons displacement and one of the most formidable of all the yachts which were transformed into U-boat harriers, was commanded by Lieut. Commander Guy E. Davis, who with most of the officers and several of the enlisted men was promoted and cited for bravery in battle by Admiral Sims on Dec. 14, 1917. The following authentic account of the action has been obtained by THE NEW YORK TIMES:

On the morning of Nov. 28, 1917, the Wakiva, accompanied by two other yachts, was escorting two large transports, the Kolm and Medina, from the harbor of St. Nazaire. These vessels being loaded with sick men, the purpose of the escort was to get them safely through the dangerous submarine zone. The greatest of care was taken in choosing the routes for the convoy and extreme secrecy was maintained in leaving port. But the German Secret Service at St. Nazaire was very sharp, and two large German cruising submarines, then off the coast of Brittany, were notified from Berlin to watch for these two ships. The submarines lay in wait and nearly attained their object.

About 5 P. M. the shores of Quiberon and Belle Isle, the home of Sarah Bernhardt, had faded away and the crews of the escorting ships had just begin to think the danger of a submarine attack was past, when the leader of the escort fired a red star, gave the submarine danger signal, and then headed full speed for a periscope that had been sighted.

The Wakiva, followed by the other yacht, at once began one of the intricate but highly efficient combing manoeuvres to make the submarine break the surface by dropping a cordon of depth bombs. After a half hour of this without success the trip toward New York was again resumed.

At 6 P. M. the same submarine was again sighted off the starboard quarter of the convoy. The escort again headed for it, while the Kolm and Medina increased their speed and took up a new zigzag to confuse the submarine. The Wakiva was furthest from the submarine, but forced draft was started, she turned full speed to head off the submarine, and the depth bombs were prepared for launching.

Hardly had the Wakiva turned when a sharp-eyed lookout in the bow saw another German submarine, running awash at high speed and heading for the Medina. The bow guns of the Wakiva instantly opened fire on this conning tower and the vessel was headed toward it at high speed. At the first shot from the Wakiva the submarine commander saw his danger and submerged quickly, but before he could get under water his conning tower had been pierced twice by explosive shells from the gunners on the Wakiva, who had been practicing for months for just such an opportunity.

As soon as the submarine was at the periscope depth it darted toward the Wakiva. The other two yachts were taking the two transports at full speed away from the scene of the fight, it being hoped that the Wakiva would be able to detain the submarine long enough to permit the transports to escape even though the Wakiva might be sacrificed in the attempt.

The comanding officer of the Wakiva in the early stages of the action was blown across the bridge by the blast from an after gun, but he kept command and sought to trap a submarine within range of his depth bombs without exposing his ship to destructiin by torpedo.

Seven complete circles were made by the submarine and the cruiser before one of the gunners on the No. 4 three-inch gun landed a lucky shot on the periscope, smashing it completely. This loss of eyesight by the submarine and the leaks made by the holes in the conning tower caused the German commander to lose control of his craft.

A command to Quartermaster Epstein at the wheel sent the Wakiva racing for the spot where the submarine had submerged. The commanding officer gave a blast on the huge siren, the signal to release the depth charges, and as the Wakiva hurried away from the spot three depth bombs detonated with terrible effect, raising a geyser of water 100 feet high. The concussion from this explosion flung the bombing crew of the Wakiva to the deck. Until the spray and gas had cleared away it was believed by the officers on the bridge of the Wakiva that her stern had been blown off, but the boat was safe and the submarine, evidently leaking badly, was blowing all tanks and endeavoring to come to the surface. The Wakiva turned to continue the battle as the crew of the submersible came on deck apparently to man their six-inch guns, which were larger than the guns on the Wakiva.

The commanding officer of the Wakiva saw that to win the battle he must get to close quarters before the enemy could get these big guns into action, so he chose to ram and ran at full speed toward the submersible, furnace flames pouring from the funnels of the Wakiva. The commander of the German submarine could not manoeuvre his vessel to escape the plan of the Wakiva, and seeing that he was doomed, gave the order to abandon ship and leaped into the water. The submarine sunk slowly, but upon the arrival of the Wakiva it was so far under water that the Wakiva passed directly over her. On passing over the submarine three more depth bombs were dropped upon her. The water was literally covered with oil and débris from the submarine as she went down bow foremost, and many of her crew were drowned.

When the ship was rocked by the explosion of the first depth bombs and everyone in the fireroom and the engine room thought that the Wakiva had been hit by a torpedo, one of the firemen stuck his head through the door and asked Machinist's Mate Bagley of Endicott, N. Y., who was standing at the throttle of the starboard engine, stripped to the waist: "Has the ship been hit? Hadn't we better get on deck?"

To this Bagley replied: "Never mind, when the Captain wants us to come on deck he will let us know; get back to your fires."

A matter-of-fact report of this action was made by the commanding officer, concluding with the statement that "the crew acted as a unit and ably upheld the traditions of the United States Navy."

Vice Admiral Wilson, who received the report, called for a detailed account of the action, which resulted in the promotion and citation for bravery of the following:

Commander Guy E. Davis, Lieutenant Commander Earle Farwell, R. F., a New York lawyer; Lieutenant Blackstone, R. F., a former member of the Lighthouse Service; Lieutenant Huntington English, R. F., the Yale athlete and brother-in-law of Walter Camp; Ensign Ralble of Cleveland, Ohio; John Holcomb, Chief Commissary Steward, nephew of the war Governor of Connecticut; Ensign Lorens Coes, son of the founder of the Coes Wrench Works at Worcester, Mass.; J. R. Wilson, seaman, nephew of Vice Admiral Wilson; Frank Epstein, Chief Quartermaster, of Brooklyn; O. P. Cooper, gunner's mate, first class, of Rochester; J. J. Fletcher, gunner's mate, second class, of New York; E. F. Keaveney, gunner's mate, second class, of Boston.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Two more lists of American soldiers who have been cited for extraordinary heroism in action were made public today by the War Department. There are no New Yorkers among the latest batch of men who have received the Distinguished Serivce Cross. The list includes one Colonel, Henry C. Jewett of Washington, D. C., who was serving in France with the 316th Engineers and who particularly distinguished himself after being put in command of an infantry brigade during the offensive in the Argonne sector. The others mentioned are:

Corporal Leslie Allen of Hawthorne, Cal.; Sergeant E. E. Perdew of Edwards, Cal.; Sergeant John Guess of Elmond, Cal.; Private J. W. Berryhill of Charlotte, N. C.; Sergeant J. N. Robertson of Graham, N. C.; Private A. O. Bridges of Jonesboro, N. C.; Private H. S. Seibel of Helmsburg, Ind.; Private W. B. Lyerly of Woodleaf, N. AQUITANIA BRINGS TROOPS.

Lands 5,000 Canadians and Some Americans at Halifax.

HALIFAX, Jan. 25.—The Cunard Line steamship Aquitania, with more than 5,000 returned Canadian soldiers, docked here today. Some of the troops were ill with mumps and influenza.

Passengers on the Aquitania included Captain Bogert, American Naval Representative with Vice Admiral Browning, of the British Navy, during the latter's inspection of German warships immediately after the signing of the armistice, and Sir George MacLaren Brown, European manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Others on board included Lieut. Col. Robert P. Perkins, head of the American Red Cross in Italy, accompanied by a party of officers and nurses engaged in Red Cross work there; Captain Cameron Currie of Detroit, an overseas Red Cross worker since the United States entered the war; Lieutenant F. W. Hall of New York, who was attached to the Intelligence Staff of the British Admiralty, and Captain W. A. Merritt, United States Navy, who served in the Mediterranean air forces, where he won distinction for bombing enemy submarines.

TABS ON CITY OFFICIALS.

Citizens' Union Shows Year's Record of Estimate Board Attendance.

Alfred E. Smith, former President of the Board of Aldermen and present Governor of the State, made the worst record of all the members of the Board of Estimate for inattention to the duties of his office, according to a score kept by the Citizens Union from Jan. 4 to Dec. 30, 1918. The Searchlight, official organ of the Citizens Union, states that Mr. Smith was absent from twenty-eight meetings of the Board of Estimate, absent for part of three others, and present at only twenty-seven meetings.

Frank Dowling, President of the Borough of Manhattan, made the best record, being absent from only one meeting, according to The Searchlight, which publishes the following table showing the number of meetings from which the members were absent in whole or in part in 1918:

Official.	Times Absent.	Times Present.
Mayor	3	55
Controller	3	55
President, Alderman	31	27
President, Manhattan	1	57
President, Brooklyn	18	40
President, Bronx	27	31
President, Queens	29	29
President, Richmond	12	46

"Both the Mayor and the Controller," continues The Searchlight, "have very good attendance records at Board of Estimate meetings. Each was absent only three times. The Borough President of Manhattan was absent just once. Other Borough Presidents would do well to follow Mr. Dowling's example, since absence from Board of Estimate meetings usually contributes nothing toward the achievement of better government.

"Aside from the Board of Estimate meetings which are held publicly, the members of the board meet usually in executive session as the Committee on Finance and Budget. Sessions of other committees of the board are likewise held. The attendance record at these committee meetings is not available from published data."

SHOWS TAX ON BIG ESTATE.

$1,159,648 Paid by Lebaudys Illustrates Application of Law.

The working out of the Federal estate tax as it applies to a large estate is shown in the payment of $1,159,648, as the tax on the estate of Mrs. Amice Lebaudy, mother of the late Jacques Lebaudy, who died in Paris in 1917. Her total estate in this country amounted to $9,320,992, and the difference between this and the tax has reverted to the Paris estate. The Federal tax was computed on the basis then prevailing, but which has since been increased. The full detail of the tax is as follows:

	P.C.	Amt.
Net estate not exceeding $50,000	1/2	$750
Net estate.... $50,000- 150,000	3	3,000
Net estate.... 150,000- 250,000	4½	4,500
Net estate.... 250,000- 450,000	6	12,000
Net estate.... 450,000-1,000,000	7½	41,250
Net estate....1,000,000-2,000,000	9	90,000
Net estate....2,000,000-3,000,000	10½	105,000
Net estate....3,000,000-4,000,000	12	120,000
Net estate....4,000,000-5,000,000	13½	135,000
Net estate exceeding 5,000,000	15	648,148
Total tax		$1,159,648

The property of the estate in this country consisted mostly of stocks and bonds. The settlement of the tax was made through attorneys for the estate in this city, the check being one of the largest that has been paid in to the Collector of Internal Revenue.

FINDS EX-SOLDIER PROBLEM SERIOUS

War Camp Community Service Reports 50,000 Applications for Jobs Daily.

NO FIGURES FOR TOTAL HERE

Dr. George W. Kirchwey Sees Growing Tendency Toward Widespread Unemployment.

MANY AGENCIES ARE ACTIVE

Say Discharged Men Crowd Into Large Cities, Only to Find Shortage of Jobs.

Every agency in this city interested in finding jobs for discharged soldiers, sailors, and war workers is agreed that already a serious condition of unemployment exists in New York City and State and that that condition is fairly general throughout the country. There are no reliable statistics available as to the number of men who need work nor as to the number of jobs open for them. So many men are being discharged that as yet no means has been found of keeping track of them. There are a number of public and semi-public organizations trying to find work for the men, and since hundreds of them make the rounds of all these places figures offer a large percentage of duplication. The War Camp Community Service estimates that the total number of unemployed men in New York now is 50,000, and that it is increasing at the rate of 7,000 to 10,000 a week. It also estimates the number of officers looking for jobs at 20,000, and points to the fact that of 500 to 600 officers using the Pershing Club daily, 75 per cent. inquire for work.

From the same source comes the statement that the number of inquiries about jobs at the War Camp's twenty-five information booths rapidly is approaching 50,000 a day, though, of course, not every man inquiring about work actually is in need of it in the sense of knowing of no other place to go for employment.

Dr. George W. Kirchwey, former Dean of the Columbia University Law School and ex-Warden of Sing Sing Prison, now head of the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor in this district, though somewhat skeptical of estimates of the number of unemployed, agrees that the situation is serious. He does not positively deny that already 50,000 men are out of work here, and frankly admits that though the Federal service is in more intimate touch with the situation than any other, it has no statistical proof that the number is or is not quite so large. Discussing the statistical aspects of the case, he said:

"The weekly reports of the Community Labor Boards of the United States Employment Service throughout the State show a growing tendency toward widespread unemployment. These boards, composed of representatives of labor and employers in fourteen industrial centres throughout the State, each headed by a representative of the United States Employment Service, began sending in weekly reports of the labor situation in their respective localities soon after the signing of the armistice. For the first few weeks these reports showed that the demand for labor was greatly in excess of the supply, a condition which naturally prevailed throughout the duration of the war.

"Toward the first of the year the balance began to swing in the other direction. Industrial centres such as Newburg, Albany, Utica, Rochester, and Buffalo, which early in December reported a fairly equal distribution of labor, began to show signs of growing unemployment. The report from Buffalo, for instance, for Dec. 31, stated that approximately 10,000 men were out of work in that district. The last report from the district, received on Jan. 24, gave an estimate of 25,000 people unemployed. At Syracuse the number of unemployed, which on Dec. 31 amounted to approximately 3,000, had grown at last reports to 4,500. Albany, Utica, and Newburg also reported unemployment.

"A tendency in this district is also shown by the weekly figures compiled by the sixty branch offices of the employment service throughout the State. On Dec. 28 the total number of applications for male help in the offices of the employment service was 12,564, while only 10,556 men applied for positions. The last report, on Jan. 18, gave 14,872 positions available, for which 15,561 men applied. In the female division the demand still continues to exceed the supply, but at a decreasing rate.

"Added to this there is the inflation of credits due to the war. Large numbers of employers have borrowed from their banks up to the limit of safety. Another Liberty Loan, of uncertain amount is soon to be floated, and there is a hesitancy on the part of the men of finance to extend further credit to business men. Finally, there is the uncertainty with regard to the markets of the future. Employers know the price of raw materials, of labor, and of transportation, but they do not know how much their products will bring in the open market six months or a year from now.

Looks for Improvement.

"The revival of confidence on the part of employers in general will do much toward clearing up the situation, but this cannot be expected immediately. If business conditions become stable by the early Summer we shall consider ourselves fortunate. Students of the situation tell us that there is a period of roaring prosperity ahead, and this is the encouraging aspect of the situation. Europe will demand from us not only great quantities of food, but also a tremendous amount of manufactured products, and the rebirth of the American Merchant Marine will open the markets of the world to the American manufacturer.

"With the United States on a normal production basis the demand for labor will undoubtedly exceed the available supply. There has been no immigration for four years. Before the war nearly 1,000,000 able-bodied workers entered this country annually, indicating that at the present time there is a potential shortage of approximately 4,000,000 workers. Another million have gone back to fight in the armies of the Allies and many of these may stay in Europe."

With this slow opening up of opportunities the discharged fighting man finds himself at somewhat of a disadvantage as compared with the war worker, whom he finds crowding and pushing him at every place work is offered. Thousands and thousands of war workers have done administrative, clerical, or executive work of one sort or another, and these men are better trained to step into similar employment, in civil life than is the soldier whose training in the majority of cases has been along specialized and not directly salable lines.

The American Soldiers and Sailors Protective Association, which opened headquarters a few days ago in the Holland Building, substantially agrees with the War Camp experts in its estimate of the problem, and the probable rate of increase. In four days after it announced its existence this organization received more than 800 applications, not only for work but for material assistance of one sort or another. This figure is, perhaps, more impressive in view of the fact that the association is not yet fully organized, and is awaiting indorsement by the National Civic Federation before it solicits contributions or widens its field. A committee of Federation men is investigating its personnel, plans, and purposes, and expects to report tomorrow.

There are almost innumerable contributing factors, but there is a general agreement on the part of those coping with the situation that the out-of-town man represents probably 60 per cent. of the difficulty. At present there are some 170,000 men quartered in various camps in the vicinity of New York, all of whom will soon be discharged, unless present plans are changed, and the majority of whom, it is said, will come to this city. Almost all the young men, it is expected, who leave the service within striking distance of New York, come here. Almost all of them like it and want to stay. Comparatively few of them have the funds to tide themselves over a personal reconstruction period. In many, many cases the old easy temptations of the town, perhaps evil ones, perhaps legitimate frivolities, tempt the soldier's small store of worldly wealth away from him and he finds himself suddenly "up against it."

From Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Chicago and other large cities come similar reports of congestion of discharged men. Men who are discharged are not given non-negotiable transportation. Many of those who are trying to help them think it would be better if they were. In some cases they are given no transportation at all. One man yesterday showed a Times reporter his discharge papers, saying that he had been discharged from the navy here with $13, and no mileage, though his home is in Sacramento, Cal. It is fairly obvious, he said, that a job there, even if one awaits him, does him little good.

Want Good Positions

A further complication results from the heightened ambition of men who have undergone anywhere from several months to nearly two years of discipline and training. They have returned to civil life with their view widened, and have firmly planted within them a demand for "something better" than what they left. They have been compared to men, who graduate from college after a purely academic training. They find within themselves conviction of increased capacity and heightened value, yet when they submit their marketable accomplishments to the cold blooded appraisal of the prospective employer they find a discrepancy between their own estimates of their worth and the amount the employer is willing to pay in advance of demonstrated ability. Into this class fall a large number of men who either are offered jobs and refuse them or who appear on the cards of the Federal Service, the War Camp, the Y. M. C. A., the Mayor's Committee's, and other agencies as out of employment because they have made demands which cannot be met.

An unexpected reason for unemployment which quickly confronts the investigator is the number of men who cannot get work, because they have nothing to work in but their uniforms. Many soldiers and sailors can be found in any of the employment places, who relate experiences of this sort. Sometimes employers frankly admit they feel a man in uniform would be out of place in their offices. Others without definitely committing themselves send the applicant away convinced that it was inability to appear in "mufti" that caused him to fail to land the job. The reasons why the men in thousands of cases do not have civilian clothes are simple, and often, for the man, insuperable. One man of thirty-two with a wife and child told a Times reporter that just after he went into service he pawned his clothes to tide his wife over a financial emergency. Now he has not the money to get them out. After many days searching he was offered a job as a car cleaner. That meant ruining the only presentable clothing he possessed. He drifted along several days more on short rations, and finally landed a job at $18 a week.

How to fit the untrained man to the job requiring some sort of technical knowledge, even if it be of the simplest sort, is one problem being considered. One answer is the trade school and other centers of vocational training. To the extent that these organizations offer their facilities to men coming back to civila life will they help in the eventual, if not the immediate, solution of the problem. Officials of the Y. M. C. A. are in conference with the Federal Employment Service on this phase of the question, and it is probable that extended facilities of this sort will soon be provided.

Some of those most earnestly trying to find jobs for the men think there is room for considerable improvement in the existing methods for getting workers and jobs together. The Federal Service with its field workers devotes itself mostly to the larger aspects of the problem, and deals with employers using more than 500 men, and the War Camp Community Service with those whose payrolls number from 10 to 50. The Parade Committee of the Mayor's Committee of Welcome to Homecoming Troops is endeavoring to locate isolated jobs among smaller employers, and the Protective Association as soon as it gets into full swing, intends to confine its job hunting to the small employers. It is convinced that a canvass of business houses of all sorts will turn up many thousands of men who will stretch a point to take on one or two or three workers, if only temporarily and thus this sort of expansion, if it can be developed through patriotic appeals, may go very far toward preventing actual distress. The Mayor's Committee is devoting itself also to placing men in the ship yards, and with the transit companies. For these purposes it has offices in the Hall of Records.

Young Officers Organize

The Protective Association, made up of a group of young officers who have been discharged from the Army and the Navy, announces that it entered the field because its members as individuals found that there was real distress among other discharged men, and that despite the number of welfare agencies, there was none, readily accessible to the average soldier or sailor, which would offer a man immediate and practical help if he needed transportation to a job, something to eat, a working suit or some overalls, or was beset by any other difficulty until he could get back on a payroll. These men found, they said, that Socialistic and other radical organizations were offering help, or at least hospitality to the men and then, when the avenue of approach was thus established, were placing all sorts of "Red" literature in their hands.

The organization offered much proof that statements of distress among soldiers and sailors were not exaggerated and announced its purpose to appeal to the public to help its campaign just as soon as the authorities approved of its purposes and its organization. It wants to co-operate, it states, with all existing organizations.

According to an announcement just made public by the United States Civil Service Commission there still are many war work jobs open in Government offices. The announcement said:

"The tremendous labor of the details of adjusting the accounts and paying the bills will occupy the time of a large force for many months to come. The Ordnance Department of the Army alone is in need of 200 senior cost accountants at entrance salaries ranging from $2,200 to $4,200 a year; 300 junior cost accountants at entrance salaries ranging from $1,200 to $2,000 a year, and 300 clerks qualified in accounting at entrance salaries ranging from $1,000 to $1,800 a year, for service at ordnance establishments throughout the United States and in the headquarters at Washington, D. C.

"The collection of the income tax also calls for the employment of an additional number of accountants. The income tax unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue is in need of a number of traveling auditors and resident auditors at entrance salaries ranging from $1,800 to $4,500 a year.

"All of these positions are open to both men and women.

"The United States Civil Service Commission is receiving applications for these positions. Applicants will not be required to report at any place for examination, but will be rated upon their physical ability, education, training, and experience, based upon the sworn statements in their applications and upon corroborative evidence adduced by the commission. Application blanks and full information may be obtained from the Secretary of the local Board of Civil Service examiners at the Post Office or Custom House in any city, or by communicating with the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C."

A specialized form of job finding that is being carried on here is that of the Professional Division of the United States Employment Service at 16 East Forty-second Street, which for the month ending Jan. 23 registrations numbered 2,244, nearly all officers and men discharged from military service. During this period appwlications from employers numbered 1,550.

It was stated that the bureau was now registering about 100 officers and men daily who are qualified for professional, executive, or highly technical positions. Opportunities are opening up for them at about the same rate, but naturally not all of them are of a character fitted to the qualifications of the registrants. The average salary commanded by those placed has been more than $3,000. Since this division handles only men able to command good salaries, the rate of placement is considerably slower than that of the general employment service.

Special Deputy Police Commissioner Rodman Wanamaker in a few days will open a civil service school to prepare soldiers and sailors discharged honorably to become members of the Police Department. These men will receive instructions free. Applications should be sent to Room 215 at Police Headquarters.

Act to Relieve Situation.

Two measures have just been taken for the alleviation of the labor situation, one as the first peace job of the Council of National Defense and the other at the instance of the New York State Division of the Federal Employment Service. Through Grosvenor B. Clarkson, Director of the Council of National Defense the forty-eight State councils, the 4,000 county councils, and the 16,000 units of the Women's Committee of the council, and the 164,000 community and municipal units are being urged to do everything in their power to foster the public work necessary to furnish employment during the readjustment period. He is sending a telegram this morning to each of the State councils instructing them to give to the United States Employment Service all data possible covering types of men needed by the State industries. The telegram says in part:

> Secretary Baker, as Chairman of the Council of National Defense, urges on the State Councils of Defense that all possible impetus be given to the construction of public works in order to furnish emergency employment. In connection with this would point out that because of war we are behind in our school construction program throughout the country. Please call this fact to the attention of your county and committee bodies and all divisions of the Woman's Committee so that school construction can be fostered immediately.

The State Advisory Board of the United States Employment Service passed a resolution yesterday urging the Secretary of War to revise the present methods of demobilization and to adopt one which would return the men to their places of enlistment. The board also invited the officials of the army and navy to send representatives to the United States Council for Re-employment, which co-ordinates the reconstruction work of the war welfare organizations, to arrange for closer co-operation. The board also recommended that the individual men needed in industry be released from service immediately so that their presence might stimulate business.

FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

British Plan for Providing Them with Civilian Clothes.

Some changes have been made in the arrangements for supplying civilian clothes to demobilized soldiers in England, says Consul Percival Gassett, Leeds. The original plans were made so that a soldier could go into any retail store and upon presentation of coupons obtain a standard suit at preferred prices. The Army Council decided, however, that the work was of such importance that it could not be changed to another Government department.

The result was that another scheme has been worked out by mutual agreement between the military authorities and the Department of Wool Textile Production. This plan provides that a soldier shall receive a new suit, or about $13 in cash. If he decides to take the suit, he is measured, chooses his pattern, and as soon as possible a suit is forwarded to his address. He is entitled to keep his uniform, but the overcoat will have to be returned, and a payment of $5 will be made to him in exchange for it.

Another point in connection with the scheme for dealing with demobilized soldiers is that men who do not desire to keep their uniforms upon receiving their discharge will be able to sell them at stores to be set up in places like Dewsbury. In the event of a large quantity of suits being returned little the worse for wear, they will be redyed and used for clothing needy people in allied countries. Uniforms that are unfit for this purpose will be turned into shoddy.

Before the war each discharged soldier received a suit of clothes made from cloth which cost from 30 to 40 cents a yard, and when made up amounted to about $3. The manufacturers have acted very generously in this matter at the present time, for, having regard for the purpose for which the material was to be used, they sold cloth at $1.22 to $1.46 a yard which they could doubtless have disposed of later for $2.90 to $3.65 per yard.

RED CROSS PLANNING FOR NON-WAR WORK

Will Train Public-Spirited Women for Service to Sick and Needy of Peace Times.

WEEK'S WAR-FUND GIFTS

American Chocolate Fund Concludes Its Activities and Reports on Its Work.

During the recent epidemic of influenza the need for women who understood how to take care of the sick and how to rpepare proper food, was emphasized in almost the same degree as was the need for nurses and nurses' aides, but only comparatively few of the graduates of Red Cross classes in Home Dietetics and Home Care of the Sick were available in the emergency. In the instances wherein they could serve their efficiency was shown by the results of their work, and the effectiveness of the classes conducted by the Atlantic Division was indicated.

To widen the field of this work a conference of delegates from all the chapters of the Atlantic Division has been called for February 4, 5, and 6, at the Teaching Center of the New York County Chapter, 453 Madison Avenue. Plans will be developed for the establishment of as many classes as possible, so that the training will not be limited to the few, but will give every public spirited woman an opportunity to promote the public health.

Miss Clara D. Noyes, chief of the nursing service in Washington, will outline the plans she has made for the development of the work, while its various phases will be discussed by Miss Julia Kline, Miss Elizabeth Fox, Miss Flora G. Sell, Miss Fredrika Farley, and Miss Mary H. Combs.

The American Chocolate Fund concludes its activities this week and reports upon its accomplishments during the war. From the organization of the Fund, to date, 40 tons, of the best hard chocolate has been sent to the fighting forces in the trenches, to aviation camps, submarine chasers, destroyers, base hospitals, and United States transports bringing back the wounded from overseas. Of this total 62,000 pounds was sent through the Red Cross directly to the men in the trenches, 4,300 pounds to the transports, and the remainder to the other branches of the service. The report of Mrs. Forrest B. Royal, the President, notes that all of the chocolate was sent free to the men, and that the letters received from the recipients and the organizations which distributed the candy, attest to the high appreciation and make the workers feel that they are amply repaid for their labor.

The report just issued by Mrs. J. A. Rountree of Birmingham, Ala., General Chairman of the War Relief Work of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, gives a full account of the work accomplished in 1918 and presents full figures for the various States. In the American Military Hospital, Neuilly, France, of which Mrs. Robert Bacon of New York is Chairman, the record is as follows: Alabama, 9 beds; Arizona, 1; Arkansas, 2; California, 3; Colorado, 2; District of Columbia, 2; Florida, 2; Georgia, 3; Illinois, 1; Kentucky, 1; Louisiana, 4; Maryland, 1; Mississippi, 1; Missouri, 1; New York, 1; North Carolina, 4; Ohio, 1; Oklahoma, 1; Pennsylvania, 2; South Carolina, 4; Tennessee, 3; Texas, 11; Virginia, 4; Washington, 2; West Virginia, 1; United Daughters of Confederacy, 1; U. D. C. War Relief Committee, 1; Minneapolis, assisted by Boston, Evansville, Ind., Portales, New Mexico, Texal, 70 beds, with an endowment of $42,000.

Mrs. Rountree also reports that the American Military Hospital No. 1 will be needed to care for the sick and wounded throughout 1919, and that therefore many of the beds must be re-endowed. The President General and Chairman of the War Relief have been officially informed that the re-endowment may be upon a basis of six months and $50 per month thereafter, for such time as the beds may be needed. In New York State the work has been under the direction of Mrs. J. D. Beale,

Current History

A Monthly Magazine

PUBLISHED BY THE NEW YORK TIMES COMPANY

THE coming twelve months will witness the most momentous changes in the Affairs of Nations ever recorded within a like period.

The "old order changeth," and in nothing so much as in the Fate of the Nations themselves.

National boundaries will change; new nations spring into being; Monarchies will be replaced by Republics, and the entire political, economic, commercial and social structures of all the peoples of earth will be entirely transformed.

A new world is now being born.

The United States has departed from its "splendid isolation" and the people of America, as a result of the war, will be vitally concerned and deeply interested in the affairs of all other peoples on earth.

It is the province of CURRENT HISTORY (a monthly magazine published by The New York Times Co.) to present each month the Facts of History in all their phases, as they affect all the nations, especially as they react on America.

It is not a magazine of comment or of prophecy.

It treats only of accomplished facts!

It presents, month by month, without criticism, opinion, bias or prediction, the essential documents, the important official records, the authentic utterances of the Statesmen, the Rulers, the Publicists, the Commanders in Chief, the authors, concerning international questions, in all phases, supplemented with accurate narratives of what is happening in all the countries, accompanied by the richest literature relating to such events by writers whose words compel attention.

CURRENT HISTORY is not oracular; it is explicit.

CURRENT HISTORY is not ponderous; it does not seek to persuade or dogmatize.

It is precise; it is a narrator; it gives the facts; it reveals the official, authentic truth. There is no partisanship, politics or partiality in presenting all phases of every nation's current history.

HAS PLAN TO BETTER TIMES SQ. SERVICE

Whitney Says Commission Will Push Work if Estimate Board Grants Money.

SUBWAY CHANGE DESIRABLE

Only Thing Delaying Work, He Writes, Is Cut in Appropriation for Public Service Board.

If the Board of Estimate furnishes the necessary money and the necessary authorization for installing continuous subway service between Times Square and City Hall, the work of preparing plans will be taken up again by the Public Service Commission and pushed rapidly to completion.

Recently there was a conference on the extension of the present shuttle service through Forty-second Street to the Grand Central Terminal, and then south on the tracks of the Lexington Avenue subway, which was attended by representatives of the Fifth Avenue, the Broadway and the Twenty-third Street Associations, and the Washington Heights Civic Association. The result was an agreement to support the improvement. A letter to this effect from Robert Grier Cook, of the Fifth Avenue Association, was sent to Travis H. Whitney, Acting Chairman of the Public Service Commission, who replied to it yesterday.

Mr Whitney said that Frank Hedley, Vice President and General Manager of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, had testified before the commission that in his belief the proposed improvement was practicable and desirable. In his letter Mr. Whitney said:

The Passengers Affected.

"In considering the Forty-second Street situation, there are three classes of passengers affected: First, those from the west side subway desirous of reaching stations on Fourth Avenue south of the diagonal station; second, passengers between the west side subway and the Queensboro subway; third, passengers between the west side subway and stations on Lexington Avenue north of diagonal station, or the Grand Central Station itself. To my mind, consideration of the first and second classes will care for the third class.

"With respect to the first class, those passengers desirous of traveling between points on the west side subway and stations on Fourth Avenue south of diagonal station, which includes a considerable number of passengers who formerly were able on the old subway to travel from upper Broadway to Fourth Avenue stations without change of trains except from express to local, such passengers now have to change at Times Square to shuttle trains, and then change from the shuttle to east side trains at diagonal station, with a walk of about 600 feet; yet local trains operating from Times Square to City Hall Loop would eliminate the necessity of any change of trains at diagonal station, including the 600-foot walk, and will involve merely a change at Times Square. The structure in Park Avenue immediately south of Forty-second Street has been so built as to allow for such operation, without the necessity of grade crossings; so that the operation can be had without any material limitation upon the capacity of the local tracks on the east side subway.

"To allow, however, for sufficiently frequent service on Times Square-City Hall local service, it will be necessary to install crossovers in Forty-second Street to the west of Sixth Avenue. This involves a reconstruction of the roof of the subway, because of the necessity of taking out columns between the tracks to allow for such crossovers. This work, together with certain other minor work preliminary to such operation, will cost around $100,000. The engineers had already been instructed to proceed with the plans for this work, but it has been suspended, due to the serious layoff of employes, particularly draftsmen and engineers, resulting from the action of the Board of Estimate on Dec. 30, in reducing substantially and limiting arbitrarily the appropriation for the rapid transit expenses of the commission."

Mr. Whitney explained that since the Board of Estimate had forced the retirement of a majority of the commission's engineers by the curtailment of the necessary appropriation to pay them, no information had been received by the commission concerning the amount of corporate stock that the board would allow for additional rapid transit purposes, and consequently it would not be wise to proceed with the plans until there was some indication that the money would be provided.

Personally Favors Improvement.

That Mr. Whitney is personally in favor of the improvement is shown by his familiarity with its possibilities. Explaining still further why he agreed that the plan should be carried out, he referred to the second class of passengers, those between the west side and the Queensboro subways. After calling attention to the fact that the plans already adopted provide for the extension of the Queensboro subway to Times Square, he said:

"The commission has under consideration as an alternative to the use of two of the tracks in Forty-second Street at Times Square, a stub-end terminal for the Queensboro subway, a deviation of that line under the corner of Bryant Park and Forty-second Street, with a station at Forty-first Street and Seventh Avenue, under and at right angles to the present Forty-second Street station of the Seventh Avenue line. This suggestion has two strong recommendations. First, it will make possible an ultimate extension westward from Seventh Avenue, and it will divert Queens passengers from the Forty-second Street end of the Seventh Avenue station to stairways at Forty-first Street, by which they could gain access to the Queensboro station.

"As you are aware, the north end of the Forty-second Street station on Seventh Avenue is now very much congested by the large number of passengers desirous of reaching the street or the shuttle either to the east side subway or to the Queensboro subway. Placing the Queensboro subway in Forty-first Street will separate the Queens passengers from those desirous of reaching the east side subway. The work on the plans for this extension has also been suspended, due to the lay-off of employes."

The third class of passengers to be considered are those between the west side subway and the Grand Central station on the Lexington Avenue subway north of the diagonal station. Mr. Whitney says that these can be accommodated by the proposed Times Square-City Hall trains stopping at the old Grand Central station or by shuttle operation on the two north tracks in Forty-second Street to the pockets now under construction close to the mezzanine of the diagonal station. In conclusion Mr. Whitney wrote:

"I think you will thus see that the suggestions from your associations rather coincide with the plans of the commission. The difficulties arise largely from lack of prompt authorizations and money for expenses and for contracts. The cure would seem to be a realization by the Board of Estimate alike of the contractual obligations of the dual contracts for the completion of all the lines therein set forth and of the public necessity for additional facilities as rapidly as they can be provided.

"Some suggestion has been made that the rapid transit work could be brought to a more prompt conclusion if it were conducted under a single-headed responsibility. This suggestion possibly overlooks the fact that the work has been carried on for a great many years under a single-headed responsibility, namely, the chief engineer of the Public Service Commission, who is responsible alike for the plans and for the supervision work. The difficulties that have arisen relate not so much to the character of responsibility which supervises the work as to lack of responsibility in the appropriating body of the city."

WOMAN TENNIS CHAMPION MAKES FIRST APPEARANCE OF SEASON IN MIXED DOUBLES MATCH

MISS BJURSTEDT ON WINNING TEAM

Woman Champion, Playing with Professional, Wins Mixed Doubles.

MISS GOSS AND HALL LOSE

Norse Girl, in First Appearance of Season, Plays Steady Game—Scores Are 6-3, 6-3, 9-7.

Walter Merrill Hall was between two fires yesterday. He was scheduled to defend his title as champion of the Seventh Regiment and was also needed as a substitute for Fred B. Alexander in the first mixed doubles match of the season at the Heights Casino in Brooklyn. Hall chose the later assignment and thereby lost by default to Arthur S. Cragin in the Seventh Regiment tournament.

The mixed doubles in Brooklyn marked Miss Molla Bjurstedt's first appearance of the season, and, paired with Harry McNeal, the professional at the Casino, the team was the winner in straight sets over Miss Eleanor Goss and Hall. The scores were 6—3, 6—3, 9—7. Fred Alexander was originally paired with the woman champion in the match, but he was unable to be present, so Hall obligingly sacrificed his chances in the Seventh Regiment event to take his place.

Miss Bjurstedt was just as skillful and effective as ever and played a remarkably steady game. Her shots were accurate and she registered numerous points for the winning pair. Hall played a fine game against odds, and at times he kept the opposing pair going at top speed. His swift service was plenty for the other side to handle, and he gave his partner, Miss Goss, great support when she found the pace especially fast. Miss Goss's game was rather erratic at times and the service of McNeal gave her considerable trouble.

Miss Bjurstedt and McNeal took the first set at 6—3. After winning the first game at 5—3, Miss Goss and Hall took the second at the same score. In the sixth game Miss Goss and Hall won a love game, but failed to rally after that. In the second set Miss Bjurstedt and McNeal came through the same margin of victory.

Miss Goss and Hall did their best work in the third set, which went to the champion and McNeal after a close competition of sixteen stirring games. Occasionally Hall would rip a hard shot down the side lines out of reach of the opposing pair, his placing of shots being very effective. During the rally in this last set Miss Goss was able to make better returns on McNeal's service, and right up to the end Miss Goss and Hall put up the most stubborn sort of opposition.

The score and point summary:

HENS GO HOME TO ROOST.

Annual Poultry Show at Garden Most Successful Ever Held.

The Poultry Show at Madison Square Garden ended last night and was the most successful exhibition the association has conducted in thirty years. More than $15,000 in cash prizes was distributed among exhibitors from all over this country and Canada. Most of the poultry wash shipped home to roost just as soon as the show closed last night.

During the past two days of the exhibition numerous wounded soldiers have visited the Garden and made inquiries about raising poultry. This opens up a field of livelihood which will undoubtedly be followed by many wounded men, and the idea is being encouraged by the officials in charge of the government exhibit. Poultryman Harry M. Lamon, of the United States exhibit, said yesterday that more than 1,500 soldiers and sailors who are soon to leave the service had asked questions about poultry raising.

Miss Henrietta Banwell, of Gaylordsville, Conn., a former Greenwich House settlement worker, who went into chicken farming two years ago, spoke highly of the pursuit for returned soldiers who sought open air work, but she said they should try to get work as novices on a chicken farm for a year to learn the business before investing their own money.

Rowland Story of Brooklyn, who judged the Minorcas and is a veteran poultryman, suggested that the Government should start at once a city school for the instruction in the poultry trade of returning soldiers. Men crippled and those who have suffered from shell shock and need country life could, in Mr. Story's opinion, make good as poultrymen and make a comfortable living.

CLINTON ANNEXES TITLE.

Wins Manhattan-Bronx Honors by Defeating Eastern District Five.

De Witt Clinton High School's basket ball team won the Manhattan-Bronx-Brooklyn P. S. A. L. championship yesterday when it defeated the Eastern District H. S. five in a closely contested game on the Boys' H. S. court by a score of 22 to 19. This result eliminated Eastern District, Brooklyn's champions, from further contention for the city championship. De Witt Clinton's five by its victory earns the right to play Newtown H. S., champions of Queens, for the city championship.

De Witt Clinton's representatives, with a snappy brand of team play and a varied offensive, led in scoring practically throughout the game. In only the second half did the Eastern District boys show in front, and then the advantage of the Brooklynites was brief. At the end of the first half De Witt Clinton's team was leading by 15 to 11. The lineup:

Clinton, (22.)	Position.	East'n Dist., (19.)
Goldberger	R. F.	H. Barshay
Melitzer	L. F.	Zaimoff
Siskind	C.	Vengrove
Rosenowitz	R. G.	R. Barshay
Wexler	L. G.	Cherry

Field goals—Goldberger, (2,) Melitzer, (2,) Wexler, (2,) H. Barshay, (2,) Zaimoff, (3,) Vengrove, (2.) Goals from foul—Goldberger, (10,) Zaimoff, (5.) Referee—Mr. Marx, Commercial High School. Time of halves—Twenty minutes.

Anna Held's Daughter Exhibitor.

Miss Liane Held Carrera, daughter of the late Anna Held, will make her début as an exhibitor of Pekingese dogs tomorrow at the tenth annual specialty show of the Pekingese Club of America, to be held at the Plaza Hotel. At least 300 of the finest imported and home-bred specimens of this breed are promised for exhibition. The champions and near champions entered include those of Mrs. Michael M. Van Buren, Mrs. Frank T. Clarke, Mrs. Arthur L. Holland, Mrs. H. A. Baxter, Mrs. Charles E. Engel, Mrs. M. E. Harby, and Mrs. Clinton Irwin Martin.

GOLF BODY WILL EXPAND.

Metropolitan Association Plans to Increase Members to 100 Clubs.

The newly appointed Metropolitan Golf Association Handicap Committee will get busy this week on preliminary work connected with the 1919 list. Not until yesterday was the exact personnel of the association known, though some time ago the executive body prevailed upon Charles W. O'Connor of Garden City to accept the position of Chairman. Mr. O'Connor, however, was unable to start anything until he knew the names of his associates. These have all been selected, and consist of A. F. Kammer of Fox Hills, Anson F. Robinson of Ardsley, John E. Kelley of Deal, and Theodore Cassebeer of Oakland.

These men are all keen golfers. O'Connor in years gone by held the championship of the Essex County Country Club, but recently he became identified with the Garden City Golf Club. Kammer, holder of the Staten Island title, is one of the best players in this district. Robinson is no stranger to handicapping. In fact, the Ardsley man was Chairman of this committee the last time it met, but resigned about the time this country entered the war. After getting his commission at Plattsburg, Robinson went overseas and only recently returned. Although unable to accept the Chairmanship again, due to pressure of business, Robinson very generously consented to serve on the committee.

Kelley has long been identified with golf at Deal and usually represents that club at annual meetings. Cassebeer is another well-known amateur, who for the last few years has done most of his playing at Oakland. It will be seen, therefore, that the committee completely represents the district—New Jersey, Long Island, Staten Island and Westchester County.

So far as the future is concerned this association has been set an example by the Massachusetts body, where the State handicapper, Dan Horan, already has received responses from forty-one clubs. He predicts that as a result of this early enthusiasm the total number of golfers handicapped this Spring will exceed the 6,000 mark. The 1918 figure was 5,873.

Although the Metropolitan Association is in a flourishing condition, having a total of eighty-eight clubs, the most in its history, there really seems no reason why this number should not reach the century mark. Of course, there is a restriction that possibly keeps a few away. In other words, the M. G. A. will not accept a club for membership until said club has joined the United States Golf Association.

The dues in the local body are only $15 a year, and in all probability several well-known organizations that are not numbered among its members now will apply before the end of the season. In looking over the list of nonmembers one comes across such organizations as the Engineers Country Club, Essex Fells Country Club, Meadowbrook Golf Club, Huntington Golf and Marine Club, Quaker Ridge Country Club, and the Hydewood Golf Club.

A TWO-MINUTE PROSPECT.

Ante Guy May Be Fifth Trotter to Enter Select Class.

On public form, Ante Guy is a candidate for two-minute honors on the trotting turf in 1919. She made her début as a two-year-old when, after forcing The Real Lady out in 2:08¾, she came on last season in her four-year-old form and won in 2:03¼, her separate time for the last half of the mile being 59¼ seconds. Should Ante Guy be so fortunate as to become the fifth member of the two-minute list of trotters, she will also be the first representative from Kentucky, as of the others Uhlan was bred in Massachusetts, Lee Axworthy in New Jersey, Lou Dillon in California, and Major Delmar in New York.

In addition to being a high class race mare, Ante Guy is also one of the best bred trotters that ever appeared on the turf. She was got by Guy Axworthy, 2:08¾, one of the best four-year-olds of his day and one that also is the sire of Lee Axworthy, 1:58¼, while her dam, Anteash, has six crosses of standard trotting blood, which makes her practically a thoroughbred trotter. She was got by Ashland Wilkes, the sire of John R. Gentry, 2:00½, out of Eoline, 2:14½, a filly by Anteeo that in her three-year-old form defeated Oro Wilkes, the first Kentucky Futurity winner. From Eoline the line of inheritance runs through Myriad, 2:28½, whose sire, Stranger, was a son of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14, while her dam, Myra, was by General Knox out of Sappho, the dam of Patience, 2:28¾. Sappho was in turn got by the champion stallion Jay Gould out of Le Blonde, the daughter of Ethan Allen that Dan Mace won with in 2:34¼ at Boston in 1870, while back of this there is a strain of Abdallah, the sire of Hambletonian.

Ante Guy first attracted the attention of the public at Monroe, N. Y., in 1916, when Frank Phillips won with her over the half-mile track in 2:17¼. The following week at Goshen she forced Emma McGowan out in 2:13½ and was taken from there to Poughkeepsie, where she made The Real Lady trot in 2:08¾ to win. After winning in 2:13¼ at Syracuse during the New York State Fair, Ante Guy was laid away until last season when she made a trip through the Grand Circuit in Murphy's stable. Her first start was made at North Randall, where she was unplaced to Binland in 2:05¼. Also after being unplaced to Heir Reaper at Kalamazoo, she was started in two races at Toledo, winning both of them and acquiring a win race of 2:05¾. She also won again at Columbus, where she defeated Del Jolla and Tacita after a five-heat contest. A second to Alma Forbes at the North Randall August meeting and a third to June Red at Philadelphia preceded a lay up until the horses reached Syracuse in September, where she finished second to Prince Loree in the $10,000 Empire State Purse. She also finished second to Prince Loree in the Columbus $10,000, but balanced her account with the Prince McKinney gelding by defeating him in the Buckeye Purse during the second week at Columbus and also in the Walnut Hall Cup at Lexington, where she won in 2:03¼. Her last starts in 1918 were made at Atlanta, where she had two races placed to her credit, making her score for the season seven firsts, three seconds, and one third out of thirteen starts.

RALPH MULFORD TO RACE.

He Will Drive Frontenac Car in 500-Mile Event.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan 25.—Ralph Mulford does not believe in thirteen being an unlucky number, for the famous "Smiler" is starting his thirteenth season as an automobile racer. His first entry into a speed contest of the season has been made for the Liberty Sweepstakes of 500 miles May 31, at the Indianapolis Speedway. Mulford is the second driver to enter the international classic in the chase for the winner's end of the $50,000 purse. He will drive a Frontenac car.

Starting his racing career in 1907 Mulford won the twenty-four-hour race on the Point Breeze track in Philadelphia. For years he was one of the most feared race drivers when the road race was king in the speed sport. He won the opening race at Elgin in 1910, and a year later annexed the Vanderbilt Cup at Savannah. He won three twenty-four-hour races after his start at Philadelphia. In 1910 he had a unique record, either winning or finishing fifth or better in every race of the season.

Mulford figures that he is due to win the 500-mile event with his light car, as he knows the track well, and with the aluminium Frontenac will be able to eliminate many tire stops that have held him back before. He almost won the first 500-mile in 1911. Ray Harroun did not change as many tires and a change near the finish relegated the Lozier to second place and the Marmon scored. Ralph always figured the last tire change beat him. In 1912 he finished tenth with a Knox, in 1913 he was seventh with a Mercedes, and in 1914 eleventh in the same car. In 1915 he failed for the first time to complete the five centuries, going only half way.

YALE'S FOOTBALL PROSPECTS BRIGHT

Players in Service Expected to Return in Time to Make Up Strong Team.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 25.—Reports from Yale football players who left college two years ago to enter military service indicate that enough of the most prominent players will return to assure an eleven of exceptional strength next Fall. Hope is felt that Artemus L. Gates, who was elected Captain at the close of the 1916 season, will be on hand in the Spring to organize the season's plans, and to lead his men during the gridiron campaign in the Fall. Gates has been in aviation service, and his friends expect he will be discharged next Spring. He wishes to return to Yale, and no action has been taken looking to the appointment of any other Captain. Gates was one of the most effective ends in the season of 1916, in which Yale, after getting a poor start because of the disorganized condition of the material left over from the previous season, rallied and defeated such formidable teams as Colgate, Princeton, and Harvard.

Only one member of "Cupid" Black's 1916 eleven, Jim Braden, has yet returned to Yale. He was the plunging full back whose ground gaining was the most reliable of any back field member of the team. John Calahan and Chester La Roche, center and quarter back of the 1916 team, have been discharged from the service and will resume their Yale studies next Spring. They will be regulars of the team next season, it is expected.

Although definite word of most of the players who expected to return for the 1919 line up has not been received, it is fully expected that the stars of the 1920 and the 1921 freshmen elevens will be found on the team.

Kempton, the former Exeter star, and Yale freshman Captain two seasons ago, is probably the most valuable player of the squad. It is likely that Kempton will be shifted to half back. Campbell, half back; Hamill and Lewis, tackles; Sidenberg and Cook, guards, are the most prominent other members of the 1920 class team.

While no announcement has been made of Yale's football coaching system for next season, the undergraduate management has been notified by Professor Robert N. Corwin, head of the Board of Athletic Control, that it will be exceedingly restricted in its application. In previous seasons a coaching staff of half a dozen members has directed the development of the team.

Tad Jones, head coach in 1916, has gone into a shipbuilding firm near Seattle, and it is by no means certain that he can be induced to leave his present position. Jones was reported to have received a salary of about $7,000 for his services in 1916.

CURLERS GOING TO CANADA.

American Team Will Defend Gordon Medal on Feb. 14.

Although scarcity of frozen ponds has forced a curtailment in curling, the enthusiasts of this ancient Scotch game are looking forward with interest to the day when an American team will journey to Canada for the purpose of defending the Gordon Medal. The international match is scheduled to be held Feb. 14, under the auspices of the Canadian Branch of the Royal Caledonian Curling Club. Canadian curlers are making preparations for the Gordon Medal competitions, which will follow closely on the completion of the Royal Victoria Jubilee Trophy and the Governor General's prize events.

If the American defenders are successful in the coming match, it will mark their sixth success since the international competition was started at Montreal, in 1888. Previous to this, or as far back as 1865, matches were played between American and Canadian teams, but the inaugural of the Gordon Medal matches witnessed the installation of a recognized set of rules for international play and an emblem of superiority. The rules, incidentally, have been changed from time to time, to meet existing conditions, but in purpose they still remain the same as when they were first promulgated to govern this annual fixture.

The medal has been won by Canadian teams on fifteen occasions, while two matches, those scheduled for 1897 and 1902, had to be abandoned. Between 1889 and 1894 no matches were played, but in 1895 the competition was resumed and continued annually, with but two exceptions, up to 1916, when the war caused an abandonment.

The medal was last won by the American team, composed of Utica players, in a match at Utica in 1915. The score was 180 to 148. Previous American victories were registered in 1911 by the Thistle Club of New York, skipped by the veteran Tom Watt, at Boston; in 1909 by Utica players in Utica; in 1904, by Utica players in Montreal, and in 1900, by the New York Club, skipped by T. Nicholson, in Utica.

Terriers to be in Movies.

Moving pictures will be made of the best bull terriers in the show to be held in Madison Square Garden on Feb. 12 by the Bull Terrier Club of America. By this means the appearance of the champions will be preserved for future generations of fanciers. The number of Canadian and local dogs already entered indicate that Major Clair Foster, U. S. A., will have his hands full in judging this gathering of "White 'Uns."

GIANTS OPEN HERE MAY 1.

Phillies to be Opening Attraction of National League Season.

The Giants will make their first appearance of the season at the Polo Grounds on May 1, when the Phillies will begin an engagement according to the official schedule announced yesterday by President John A. Heydler of the National League. The New York team opens the season on April 23 at Philadelphia in a four-game series and will then play three games in Boston on April 28, 29 and 30, before coming home to Harlem.

The Brooklyn team draws the Boston holiday plum and will play two games with Boston in that city on April 19, Patriots Day. The Dodgers will stay in Boston and play a series beginning on April 23. Brooklyn will play in Philadelphia on April 28, 29, and 30.

The Giants will have 11 Saturday games at home during the season and 12 Saturdays abroad. McGraw's club has two holiday dates at the Polo Grounds, Memorial Day and Labor Day. The New York club will play in Philadelphia on July 4.

Brooklyn will have two holiday dates at home, July 4 and Labor Day. The Dodgers have 11 Saturdays at home and 12 Saturday games abroad.

The season will close on Sept. 30 and the Giants will finish their schedule at the Polo Grounds against Philadelphia.

CORNELL NEEDS PITCHERS.

Coach Al Sharpe Issues Call for Baseball Men at Ithaca.

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 25.—Besides launching track practice and laying the ground work for rowing plans, athletic leaders at Cornell have now begun to assemble the material for the baseball team, and Dr. Al Sharpe, who is busy just now with the basket ball squad, has called the baseball players out for a series of lectures and some preliminary training before actual practice starts in the baseball cage next month.

The baseball squad will contain less than half of the 'Varsity men in last year's team, but the freshman squad of a year ago will help out. Captain Howard of last year's team, shortstop and one of the best batters, is not yet here, but plans to re-enter the university with the Spring term. Captain-elect Corwin, second baseman, and Harden and Murphy from the outfield, are in the university, as is Needle, one of the younger 'Varsity pitchers of last season. Brookmire, the most capable of the twirlers, is missing, as is Whitmore, a crack catcher.

Men on the 'Varsity squad last year who will try for places this year are Dragat, Floirsheim, Holbrook, Lalley, J. Minier, Clarey, and Neal. The freshman team is expected to give the following recruits to the 'Varsity squad: Bollman, Adelsberg, Hill, Molinet, Nordgren, Chobot, and Sidman, the latter and Molinet being on the basket ball squad at present. The greatest problem, as usual, will be to find capable pitchers and a catcher who can replace Whitmore.

Although track practice is continuing successfully, with upward of 100 men out each day, the management is not yet able to announce a schedule. The minimum schedule for track, participation in the Intercollegiate meet, and one other outdoor meet, has already been financed, and it is now hoped to add a number of Winter engagements.

WILLIAMS CAPTAIN RETURNS

Prospects for Track Team Brighten with Stewart in College.

Williamstown, Jan. 25.—Another athlete has returned to resume his studies at Williams, Captain Francis B. Stewart of the track team arriving this week. He has been at an officers' training camp. He has won points in the half-mile for three years.

The return of Ira Thomas as baseball coach at Williams leads to the hope of a strong nine for the Purple this Spring. He has coached for two years past, but was handicapped because of the war conditions which took players away from college as fast as he developed them.

NEWTOWN BEATS FLUSHING.

Goals by Moss and Platow Bring Victory by 25 to 22 Score.

Goals by Moss and Platow in an extra five-minute period gave Newtown High School's basket ball team a victor over the Flushing High School five yesterday on the Flushing court. The score was 25 to 22. This success marked Newtown's third over Flushing for the season. The contest was closely played throughout.

At the end of the first half the teams were deadlocked at 11 points all, and the whistle, ending the game after the customary two halves, found both quintets with scores of 22 points. In the extra five-minute period agreed upon Moss shot a field goal and Platow a goal from foul, while Flushing's efforts to score were frustrated by clever defensive plays by the Newtown line-up.

The line-up:

Newtown, (25.)	Position.	Flushing, (22.)
Moss	R. F.	Adikes
Fulgione	L. F.	Brown
Stewart	C.	Bello
Platow	R. G.	Wright
McGratten	L. G.	Schmidt

Field goals—Moss, (5,) Fulgione, (3,) Stewart, (2,) Gratten, Adikes, Bello, (4,) Wright, Schmidt, (2.) Goals from foul—Platow, (3,) Brown, (5,) Bello. Time of halves—Fifteen minutes. Referee—John Jones, P. S. A. L.

Many Entries for Airedale Show.

A large number of entries from fanciers in the West and Canada is expected for the annual Airedale Club of America show, which will be held at the Hotel McAlpin Feb. 18. Local fanciers are manifesting unusual interest in the show, and interesting competition is promised for out-of-town entries. J. Robinson Peard has been selected to judge.

BIG MEET FOR SOLDIERS.

Army to Prepare for Olympic Games in Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—An army general order has approved a great athletic meet submitted by the Y. M. C. A. and a cable message has been sent to the Association's director of physical education, Dr. George J. Fisher, asking him to come overseas to help set up the program in the American Expeditionary Forces. Dr. Fisher has been asked to bring with him fifteen of the foremost American athletic directors, the cable specifying such well-known figures in sport as Alonso A. Stagg of the University of Chicago, F. L. Kleeberger of the University of California, William F. Garcelon of Boston, Dr. A. Sharpe of Cornell, John Davis of Stevens Institute, L. T. Bellmont of the University of Texas, Paul Phillips of Amherst, and C. L. Brewer of the University of Michigan.

It is believed that many of these men will realise what a tremendous influence they can wield here during the period of occupation and will come overseas for a few months at least. The Y. M. C. A. is preparing to lay greater stress than ever from now on upon athletics.

The great athletic program which requires the services of such experts as have been named has been arranged to point to a monster carnival of athletic competition, in which representatives of the allied nations will take part. These contests will be open only to soldiers of the allied armies, being in effect a set of military Olympic games.

"Athletics for everybody" is the object aimed at. Plans call for official A. E. F. championships in a wide variety of competitive sports, beginning with regimental elimination contests and ranging upward through divisions and possibly army corps, culminating in finals to be held in Paris. But further than the object to be gained by these military championships are the potential possibilities of physical pageants and demonstrations to be held in various centres.

While the main features of the proposed military Olympic games will be supervised by such men as have been named, leaders here are hopeful of having the co-operation of such men as Dr. William Burdick, head of the department of physical training and playground work in Baltimore; H. J. Norton, Director of physical education in the schools of Rochester, N. Y.; Dr. H. F. Kallenberg of Chicago, A. E. Metzdorf and George E. Stock of New York, and Fred Henckle of Minneapolis.

Dr. Fisher is expected to arrive in France early in February. It was through his efforts that such men as William H. (Sparrow) Robertson, Frank Quinby of Yale, Jack Magee of Bowdoin, Bill Clarke, Platt Adams, and others went overseas months ago.

NAVY OARSMEN ARE BUSY.

Annapolis Crews Preparing for Active Season on Severn.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 25.—With a larger rowing squad than ever before and increased facilities, the Naval Academy is taking an active part in reviving rowing among the colleges. The leading part which the Academy is taking is due in a large measure to the activities of Lieut. Commander J. R. Morrison, who is the representative of the Navy Athletic Association for rowing. Ever since the beginning of last Summer he has been energetic in getting in touch with the other rowing colleges and planning to make the coming Spring notable in college aquatics.

Lieut. Commander Morrison has written to all the rowing colleges of the East in order to secure dates for the Naval Academy crews. Syracuse has replied that it will not support rowing this year, but Pennsylvania has agreed to row at Annapolis, as it has been doing for years, and will probably bring 'Varsity, junior, and freshman crews. Yale, Cornell, Harvard, Princeton, and Columbia have written that their plans have not sufficiently crystallized to take up the matter yet.

At the Naval Academy interest in rowing is at a high pitch. There were eighty who came out for rowing from the fourth class, and as many as eight crews were frequently on the water at once.

These young men, who got a good start last Summer, started to work in the tank this week, and the candidates from the upper classes for the first and junior crews will report about Feb. 1, when Coach Richard Glendon will arrive and begin work. Those of the first crew who will be available are Captain Harris, Ingram, Ballreich, Skinner, and Reppiler, with Coxswain Crawford. Then Glendon will have the whole of last year's fine fourth class crew, which defeated Pennsylvania, and a number of others who have had his coaching for one or more years as members of junior crews and substitutes.

Final Round in Cue Tourney.

Competitors in the Victory Handicap 18.2 balk-line billiard tournament being conducted under the auspices of the N. A. A. B. P. at the Rational Recreation Academy in Brooklyn will commence play this evening in the final round for the trophy. Those who have qualified to compete for the prize include Charles J. Stainbugler, L. J. McManiman, James Shea, Frank Boyd, G. Worcester, and James F. Blaisdell.

COLLEGES PREPARE FOR PENN RELAY

Yale, Harvard, Princeton, and Many Smaller Schools Expect to Send Teams.

Pennsylvania's Relay Carnival, now in its twenty-fifth year, will be the first big set of outdoor sports after the war. Manager Orton has already received oral or written assurance from many of the best colleges of the East and Middle West that they will have their best men on for the meet. The Pacific Slope may be represented again by the University of Southern California.

It is expected that Yale, Harvard, and Princeton will make their initial track and field appearance at this meet. Harvard and Princeton already have their men in training. Yale has, as usual, a big squad out and Coach Mack will no doubt find some stars among them. Jack Moakley, at Cornell, will no doubt come through as usual with some good teams, though at present his material is unknown. The coming indoor meets will give some insight into the material at all of the colleges. Pennsylvania and Princeton at present seem to have the strongest teams, but the other big Eastern colleges will doubtless develop fast teams by the date of the carnival, the last Friday and Saturday in April.

The invitations to the colleges have been sent out and acceptances have already been received from quite a few. Of these Georgetown is the most prominent. They will run in the relay championship for the Southern Intercollegiate A. A. Last year Johns Hopkins came through and won this event after a hard race. Georgetown was badly handicapped by losing their fastest man, Gates, who was ordered to a training camp after winning the quarter mile hurdle. A substitute was brought on from Washington that night and the race was lost. Georgetown is out to win this season and as Graduate Manager Cox writes that both Gates and Griffith, their star men, are back, they hope to make amends for last year's defeat.

Many changes were necessary this year in the preparatory school classes. A circular letter to the various Catholic schools indicated that these schools preferred not to have a special championship. This event was put on three years ago at their request, and the present desire of the Catholic schools to get back into their respective class events may be due to the easy victories scored by the St. Benedict's Preparatory School of Newark in this event. The St. Benedict's Preparatory School was placed in the championship class. They have been third in this event the past two years, and it is quite possible that had their men not run previously in the Catholic school championship, they would have won out. If this school can develop as fast a team this year they will prove worthy contenders with Hill, Mercersburg, Exeter, and Lawrenceville for this coveted title. The Interacademic A. A. championship will be held on the first day of the meet.

STRENGTHEN TIGER FIVE.

Basket Ball Stars Return to Aid Princeton Quintet.

PRINCETON, Jan. 24.—Basket ball prospects at Princeton are brightening with the return of a large number of former stars from service. Captain Gray, who starred at guard last season, has transferred himself to the centre position this year. Morry Trimble, first choice for All Eastern forward in the 1917-1918 season, returned to college a few days ago after release from the Naval Aviation Corps.

Margetts seems the probable running mate for Trimble at forward. Gil Parmele, captain-elect of the 1917-1918 team, may possibly return to college. Opie and Davis of last year's freshman team are at present holding down the guard positions and bid fair to win permanent berths on the team.

Special efforts are being made at Princeton this year to make basket ball a sport in which a great number shall take part in pursuance of the general trend for the improvement of athletics in the colleges. Three basket ball teams have already been organized: The 'Varsity, Freshman, and a new team called the Nassau Quintet. Schedules have been arranged for all the teams.

The schedule: Columbia at Princeton, Jan. 31; Princeton at Rutgers, Feb. 8; Princeton at Columbia, Feb. 12; Princeton at Penn, Feb. 18; Yale at Princeton, Feb. 22; Cornell at Princeton, Feb. 28; Dartmouth at Princeton, March 5; Princeton at Yale, March 11; Penn at Princeton, March 15; Penn at Princeton March 18 (in case of tie).

HOPPE MAY PLAY SUTTON.

Brooklyn Academy Is Negotiating for Match in February.

Willie Hoppe, balk-line billiard champion, will probably soon be seen in a match at the Rational Recreation Academy in Brooklyn against the veteran George Sutton. Officials of the Brooklyn Academy are negotiating for the match now. It is planned to have Hoppe and Sutton compete early next month.

The Rational Recreation Academy will be the scene this week of a three nights' match between Jake Schaefer and Welker Cochran of Chicago, two of Hoppe's leading rivals for the balk-line title. This match will commence Wednesday afternoon and end Friday night. It will be for 1,800 points in blocks of 300 afternoon and evening.

BOXING FANS FOR DEMPSEY.

Salt Lake City Boxer Favored as Opponent for Jess Willard.

Jack Dempsey of Salt Lake City, who has been clamoring for a championship boxing match with Jess Willard, heavyweight title-holder, will probably be the man selected to do battle with the big Kansan, on the date which Tex Rickard will announce before March 25, for Willard's next ring competition.

The selection of Dempsey seems a foregone conclusion, since there is no other aspirant on the pugilistic horizon who overshadows Dempsey in comparison. The Salt Lake City heavyweight has consistently pounded and battered his way to the forefront of pugilism's limelight, toppling over with apparent ease those who would question his right to such recognition, until there is no one left in the field who is capable of giving Willard's annoyer serious contention.

Talk of effecting a visit to this country of Georges Carpentier, Europe's premier heavyweight, is not given serious consideration by the followers of boxing. Carpentier is engaged in his war duties in France, and there is no immediate indication of his release from his war services. It is generally conceded that the physical advantages in such a bout would be so overwhelmingly in Willard's favor as to make for one-sided competition.

Speculation is rife on what location will be accepted by Promoter Rickard as the scene of the bout. It is stipulated that the contest is to be for any number of rounds up to forty. Promoter Rickard and the general boxing public favors a distance bout, which will produce a decisive winner. In only a few States in the Union are long contests permitted, and in some of these States the Chief Executives have strongly objected to pretentious bouts such as the proposed match will be. The Governors of Connecticut and Maryland both set themselves as unalterably against a meeting between Willard and Fred Fulton, when Colonel J. C. Miller of Ranch 101 fame, was planning such a bout, and it is not likely the opinions of these executives will change in the time between now and July 4. Colorado also permits distance bouts, as does Louisiana, but it is a matter of conjecture what attitude will be taken by the Governors of these two States on the proposed Willard match. Tia Juana, a post-village of San Diego, Cal., permits distance bouts also.

Promoter Rickard is not bound by the terms of the agreement between himself and the champion to promote the contest in this country, so that if necessity demanded the match could be held in Havana, where Willard beat Jack Johnson for the title four years ago. It is expected, though, that the match will be held in this country.

When Rickard secured Willard's signature to articles of agreement calling for the champion's appearance in a title bout, the Western promoter added another chapter to his enviable record as a promoter of important boxing matches. Promoters throughout the country have been striving for since Willard gained the title. Rickard has the distinction of being the promoter of the most successful match of ring history. This was the bout between Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries, at Reno, Nev., July 4, 1910. The sum of $270,775 was paid by 18,020 spectators to see this battle, for which a purse of $121,000 was hung up by Promoter Rickard. Rickard also promoted the Battling Nelson-Joe Gans lightweight championship bout at Goldfield, Nev., in September, 1906, and the Willard-Frank Moran ten-round bout at Madison Square Garden three years ago. This is the only contest in which Willard participated since gaining the title.

A movement has started in Pennsylvania for the substitution of ten-round bouts for the six-round contests now permitted by law. Such a bill was vetoed by former Governor Martin G. Brumbaugh. Senator W. E. Crow, Republican State leader, is fostering the new bill, which provides for an appropriation of $35,000 to defray the expenses of the proposed commission, a 5 per cent. tax on the gross receipts of all shows, and the prohibition of free tickets and rebates.

NEW PLAN AT COLUMBIA.

Entire Student Body to Take Part in Athletics.

Three factors are to be combined to make athletics at Columbia University more general and at the same time to make it possible to develop a better standard of 'Varsity and freshman teams, when the university opens for the Spring term in February. The step that is to be taken to make participation in sports more general among the students is the institution of the plan devised by the Faculty of the college last Spring for compulsory athletics or gymnastic work by all undergraduates, except those who are physically unable to take part.

The second factor is the enforcing for the first time of the trustees' ruling requiring every undergraduate to pay annually a $10 student activities fee, at least half of which is to go to the athletic association. A third factor is the organization of a committee of undergraduate managers who will advise with the graduate manager and become a clearing house for the exchange of ideas between the students and the university authorities.

The compulsory athletic and physical training program calls for the physical examination of all students who are candidates for the baccalaureate degree. The students are to be graded as to their physical fitness, and those who stand in the lowest third of the whole group will be assigned to special classes in body building, calisthenics and the like. Those in the upper two-thirds will be required, however, to go out for athletics or to join gymnasium classes, which will be required to spend a major portion of their time in athletics.

The establishment of the undergraduate activities fee will settle once and for all the problem of obtaining sufficient funds to maintain sports. There will accrue to the association from this fee a sum estimated at between $7,500 and $10,000, which will be an assured income each year. In normal years the total budget for all teams has been in the neighborhood of $35,000 or $40,000. The undergraduates were asked to join the association at an annual membership fee of $10, but the income from that source was never large. The alumni will still be asked to contribute by taking out memberships in the association.

BAKER TO ATTEND DINNER.

Congressmen Will Also Be Guests at Banquet to Rickenbacker.

The Contest Board of the American Automobile Association, which, in cooperation with a half score of other automotive bodies, is giving a great banquet at the Waldorf on Feb. 3 to Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, has received word from Congressman Ireland, Captain Rickenbacker's personal friend, who is to act as toastmaster at the dinner, that a representative delegation of Congressmen would attend. One of the guests and a speaker of the evening will be Secretary of War Baker. One thousand covers will be set for the banquet. This affair from the standpoint of purpose, size, and character of those participating will be one of the most notable held in this city in some time.

King's Horses to Race Again.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—It is more than probable that, when the English flat racing season opens, King George will run his horses in the familiar scarlet and purple after the signing of the peace terms. Hitherto they have run under the name and colors of Lord Marcus Beresford.

HARVARD PREPARES FOR TRACK MEETS

All Sports Boom at Cambridge Following Meeting of Athletic Committee

FIX BASEBALL SCHEDULE

Crimson Nine Plans Home Games with Yale and Princeton Teams.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 25.—Athletic sports at Harvard are due to take on a new lease of life. The big rush of candidates for the hockey and track teams and for early registry of the crew lists has been followed by the long awaited meeting of the College Athletic Committee.

Track sports have received first attention, and the 'Varsity and freshman teams, coached by Donovan, will have their usual competitions. Harvard will enter its men in several of the Winter indoor meets and will hold its annual track meet with Yale on May 17, and enter a team at the intercollegiate championships two weeks later. Also the H. A. A. will strive to have the stadium track at Cambridge chosen for the big games by the I. C. A. A. A. A. Executive Committee.

The Harvard baseball schedule provides for the home-and-home series with Yale and Princeton, and also for the playing off of any possible ties. William McLeod, Bobby Gross, and Lee Evans, each of whom captained the informal nine for a time last Spring, will be available again.

Tomorrow night the Harvard graduate rowing committee will present its plans. The committee is expected to submit a schedule of races for the 'Varsity and freshmen crews. There are sure to be some preliminary races before Harvard meets Yale and the outlook is that the Crimson and Blue will come together at New London again. There will not be much hard work done at the boathouses in Cambridge until the middle of February, but when the squad does come out it will be the largest in years.

The Graduate Football Committee may arrange a schedule providing for the Princeton game at Princeton Nov. 1, and the Yale game at Cambridge on Nov. 22. Harvard will play no home games with teams from any great distance from Boston, preparing for its big games against some of the New England colleges.

Harvard will have a formal hockey team for what little remains of the Winter. A few games have been arranged and the Athletic Committee has favored a final game with Yale.

Within a few days the Athletic Committee Chairmen at Harvard, Yale, and Princeton will get together to settle a few eligibility rules. The most important ruling needed is that to settle the status of the boys returning from service who have dropped classes and are out, of course. It is thought here that the bars will be lowered for such athletes.

TO NAME CREW CAPTAIN

Harvard Eight Loses Emmet, Who Stroked Winning Shell.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 25.—The appointment of an acting Captain of the Harvard crew will be announced Monday night after the second meeting of the University's Athletic Committee. The Crimson's eight will be unfortunate inasmuch as it will lose Richard S. Emmet, of South Salem, N. Y., who stroked the splendid winning shell last Spring. Emmet, who was in Red Cross work overseas, will be unable to take up his college studies again until the Fall.

The Advisory Rowing Committee is at present engaged in drafting a schedule and attending to other necessary rowing matters. Robert F. Herrick, Chairman of the committee, is taking no part in the parleys, being in the South at present.

The question in Harvard rowing circles, now that Mr. Herrick is freed of his war labors, is whether he will act as head coach this Spring or allow Bill Haines to go ahead on his own hook as he did in 1918. Herrick is a keen sighted coach, and while Haines in 1916 looked out for the individual rowing, the former decided the makeup of the crew. That Spring the Crimson defeated Cornell and Yale, but lost an early race to Princeton. Last year Haines working alone reversed the decision at Princeton, and again vanquished Yale.

Another matter of considerable interest is the rowing program for the Spring. It is generally understood that Harvard will not consent to row at New London this year, although the Advisory Rowing Committee, which is somewhat of a law-making body unto itself, may decide to return to the old schedule of making Red Top their quarters in June, topping off their stay by the race with Yale on the Thames.

There is some talk that Harvard wants the Elis to row here in June over the Henley distance, and would not be adverse to Princeton making a third party in such a race. If such a triangular brush is booked, the Crimson may arrange to meet Columbia here earlier in the season.

Harvard will hardly have a stroke oar in a class with Emmet, but several promising men for this position are available. The freshman pace setter, Marlin Olmsted, has not returned to college, but John Borland, the captain of that crew, rowed for some time at stroke last year. Whittemore, stroke of the second 'Varsity, is back in college, and Fred Whitman and Stanley Coleman of the 1918 crew have also had experience there.

PLAN REGATTA ON SEINE.

Crews from Several Allied Nations Will Enter Contests.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—Knights of Columbus here have announced a rowing regatta to be conducted on the Seine early in March. Already more than 100 entries have been received from men in the A. E. F. whose reputations in the crews of Cornell, Columbia, Syracuse, Pennsylvania, Harvard, Yale, Wisconsin, and other universities and schools of America are firmly established.

The Knights of Columbus will have as a member of their rowing committee Lieutenant L. A. Peterson, who has been in the Naval Aviation Forces, one of the best known of America's amateur bicycle and rowing successes.

France, England, Belgium, Italy, Portugal, and America will be represented in the rowing contests, which should prove of international interest. The expenses of the matches, the training quarters, and boats will be paid by the Knights of Columbus. The events are under the management of the Athletic Division, and J. J. Carey has assigned Big Bill McCabe of his force to handle the matches.

STEEL TRADE SLOW; FEW NEW ORDERS

Mills Working at 70% Capacity, More Than a Third of Which Is on Old Business.

BIG DROP IN PRICE OF COKE

Garfield's Announcement of Coming Relinquishment of Control Brings a Decline.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 25.—Blast furnace and steel mill operations have continued to decrease somewhat, but estimates made in some quarters that the steel mills are operating at only 60 per cent. of capacity appear too low, and 70 per cent. is probably nearer the mark. That a rate of 60 per cent. or less may be attained within the next few weeks, however, is a distinct probability, as new business is not coming in at a rate sufficient to take care of more than a third or a half of the present production. The remaining production is against old orders which will not carry the mills for any great length of time.

The announcement by the Fuel Administration last week that its control of coke and bituminous coal prices and distribution would be relinquished at the end of January was followed promptly by the offering of coke at less than the Government limit. The price of coke is now a matter of grade. The Government limit on beehive furnace coke, applicable to the Connellsville and some other regions, is $6. During the last week off-grade coke has been offered at prices down to $5 or less, there being no demand for such coke for blast furnace use, so that it had to be sold for heating purposes. For standard grade furnace coke furnaces will not pay above $5.50 or possibly $5.75, and that now represents the market range. Foundry coke has held fairly well to the Government limit of $7, but some brands of fair quality are available at $6.50. Further declines in coke are expected. Furnacemen do not admit that cheaper coke should mean lower-priced pig iron, because this commodity has already been reduced $3 a ton from the Government limits.

The scrap market has continued to weaken, and there are reports that heavy melting steel has been offered at as low as $17 without finding takers. The Government limit was $29, but the 3½ per cent. brokerage permitted would make the actual cost $30 to the consumer. Machine shop turnings also have suffered a heavy decline. The scrap market is not closely quotable, as there is practically no demand from consumers, and a regular trading basis is not developed.

Shell Steel at Low Prices.

Shell steel of regular quality, no longer needed for shell making, is being offered at prices much below the recognized prices for regular soft steel. Such demand as exists at present for finished steel products is entirely for very early deliveries; buyers not being interested in purchases at all unless they need the material for immediate use. Even though deliveries are to be expected in from two to four weeks, buyers are asking mills in many cases to guarantee prices to date of shipment, but such requests are uniformly refused. So far as can be observed the recognized prices for finished steel products and for regular unfinished steel are being strictly maintained by all producers. Furnacemen are holding pig iron prices very firmly, but there are occasional sales by consumers at cut prices.

The view has become much more general in the steel trade that an extensive readjustment in affairs is necessary before business can be resumed in normal manner. The idea that peace business can be done at wartime prices is now largely abandoned. It is recognized, however, that readjustments cannot well be forced, but must be allowed to occur along natural lines, and this will consume time.

The steel producers, for example, cannot make radical reductions in their selling prices because their costs are extremely high, and they have no desire to attempt to make wage reductions without the cost of living having first come down. A readjustment, moreover, that merely affected the price of steel would not begin to produce a demand for steel equal to the productive capacity, because the cost of consuming or utilizing steel is still very high, and it must come down also.

Export Business Slow.

Very little export business in steel is being done. There is a great deal of inquiry, but ocean freights are so high, as compared with those from Great Britain, that the mills generally lose in the competition. Some reductions in rates from the United States have been made in the last week, but they are not sufficient to change the situation materially.

There have been some new bookings in shafting and screw stock, but they are light compared with normal demand, although producers regard business as fair in the circumstances. No precise estimates are made as to the rate at which shafting makers are operating, but 50 to 60 per cent. of capacity would probably be a fair guess. Current bookings are far from sufficient to support such a rate, but there is considerable backlog business being filled, and this will last for some time.

Since the four-point reduction in shafting and screw stock, the market has been steadily maintained, there being no disposition on the part of producers to cut prices. As the material is on a 10-cent list the reduction [illegible] 17 to 21 per cent. is $4 a net ton, the same reduction as was made on steel bars. The drawing establishments feel that they were under no obligation to make a greater reduction than that on their raw material, on account of high labor costs and the increased depreciation on discarded material, as scrap has declined much more than the cost of bars.

Speaking of scrap, the consumers do not manifest much disposition to bid or make purchases, and the impression prevails that this condition will exist for quite a while. This is entirely opposite the theory accepted in some quarters that the large scrap dealers had been campaigning to "bear" the market for the purpose of loading up on a low market and then advancing the rates. It can now be seen very clearly that dealers have little occasion to believe that consumers will buy more freely in the next few months.

Along the line of soft steel there has been some demand for standard billets and small billets, but little is heard in the market about sheet bars. Regular prices are in vogue, $47 for sheet bars and small billets and $43.50 for standard billets, but with buyers not making bids it is hard to tell how the market would stand on these prices. With a chance of obtaining a cut price, it is likely that consumers would want to negotiate a little before closing a bargain. In the various descriptions of high carbon steel that which is the most readily made is that demanded generally by the consumers. There is a good-sized tonnage of discard steel and regular shell steel of a very good quality. Some shell steel offered in billet form has passed the regular inspection of the British Government. There being so many descriptions of high carbon steel, it is impossible to quote prices correctly, for the sellers hardly know what to ask for it, and the buyers are in doubt as to what bids they should make. What could be made into rolling material might bring from $30 to $35, while that which could be used as forging steel ought to bring $40 to $50. One maker here is reported to be forging billets at $51 on specifications.

Close Watch on Prices.

According to the best information obtainable finished and unfinished steel prices are holding absolutely firm. The general disposition of the trade is such that in all probability if there were any cutting the news would become public property very promptly. There is keen interest in the matter of prices on the part of both buyers and sellers, all parties evidently being of the same mind that accidents are a distinct possibility, so that a close watch needs to be kept for them.

In some finished steel products commissions are being allowed, but generally only the 50 cents a ton that has obtained more or less at all times, and being given only to recognized middle interest who sell to the final buyer at the full price. To most middle interests 50 cents a ton is not worth while. The steel mills are careful to avoid giving the much solicited price guarantees. Many buyers ask for a guarantee despite the fact that the material is to be shipped very promptly. There is no business going except that for prompt delivery, and one mill or another can generally be found able to make shipment within two or three weeks. In manufactured steel products there seems to be a little disposition to give price guarantees, and it is related that one nut and bolt manufacturer west of Pittsburgh has given price guarantees, though not perhaps as a regular policy.

Steel producers report an increase in specifications during the last week as compared with the week preceding, the specifications being almost wholly against old contracts, while there is very little fresh buying. As to the buying of steel products in general, or specifying against contracts, the observation is commonly made that so far as regards business the armistice came at approximately the worst time in the year. The thirty days following was altogether too short a time for buyers and sellers to get their bearings, and then came the holiday period, which is always a dull one, so that the market has really had no good opportunity thus far to revive. Now, with year-end adjustments and computations largely out of the way, there is an opportunity for business to revive, and increasing specifications are pointed to as an indication that it has started to do so, even though in quite a modest way.

There is very little activity to the pig iron market, although prices are firmly maintained, with furnaces saying that the $3 reduction already made was the last until a further reduction in shipping costs is engineered. There is a decrease in shipments against old contracts, but they still represent the total of pig iron produced. A furnace in the Shenango district was blown out because of a lack of business. The market remains quotable at the following figures: Bessemer, $32.20; Basic, $30; No. 2 Foundry, $31; Malleable, $31.50; Forge, $30; prices are free on board Valley furnaces, freight to Pittsburgh being $1.40.

The estimated production of coke in the Connellsville region for the week ended Jan. 19 was 291,332 tons, contributed by the two districts as follows: Connellsville, 151,510 tons, a gain of 10,070 tons; Lower Connellsville, 139,832 tons, a gain, of 9,899 tons, or a total gain of 19,966 tons. By interests the production was: Furnace, 160,522 tons, a gain of 10,502 tons; merchant, 130,810 tons, a gain of 9,464 tons. Coal production largely overcame the loss of 2,653 tons the previous week by converting it into a gain of 24,778 tons.

The aggregate of the week's production, with the coke reduced to its coal equivalent, was 632,691 tons, a gross gain of 54,727 tons.

The output of the region is thus found to closely approach that of the week ended Nov. 2 last, when coke reached 293,865 tons, coal 216,237 tons, and the aggregate tonnage was 657,034. While the coke market is rather inactive, as compared with ordinary times, it is practically wide open. The only thing that remains of Government price limits is that the best grades of foundry coke are still held at $7. During the war all coke was priced as standard, no matter what the quality. Now the trade is even more particular than usual, and this results in there being many grades and quite a gradation in prices. Furnace coke is quoted at $5.50 to $5.75.

COTTON QUIET, BUT FIRM.

Market Closes from 40 to 59 Points Up from Friday.

The cotton market was quiet and firm yesterday. None of the nervousness of the earlier days of the week was apparent, and the free selling for local ring and Southern account was notable for its absence. From being the persistent and aggressive seller the South was reported on the other side of the market, and not a few buying orders came from New Orleans and elsewhere in the belt. New York bought some, but not a great deal. The Liverpool market was closed.

At the start, prices were up 18 to 33 points over Friday's close. Then, on moderate buying and very light offerings, the advance was continued until March, the best of the near months, was up 92 points, and October, a good distant month, had gained more than 80 points.

Short covering held the market well at these levels for a while, and when this demand was filled a reaction set in which carried quotations down 30 or 35 points from the early high. The reaction, however, did not go far, and the confident tone obtained right to the close of the day. At the finish prices were up 40 to 59 points for the active months.

The following shows the statistical position of cotton figured by The Financial Chronicle:

MARKET NEEDED FOR FOREIGN SECURITIES

American Investors, Says National City Company, Must Buy Them Now.

NEEDED FOR READJUSTMENT

Only When Such Purchases Become a Habit, Writer Declares, Will This Country Maintain Its Position.

American investors must buy foreign securities if the United States is to maintain the international position she has won as the result of the war, according to the Foreign Department of the National City Company, which has prepared an article advising the establishment of a market for the industrial as well as the Government issues of the other countries of the world. Such investment by Americans, it says, will be especially necessary during the first few years of the readjustment period, when some of the European nations will be largely engaged in rehabilitating their own industries, and will not have the surplus stock of merchandise to sell to us as part payment of our exports to them. The article says:

"When the practice of buying foreign securities once becomes an established habit in the United States, it will grow with increased momentum and become one of the most important factors in maintaining the commercial and financial position of our country. It may appear a gigantic task to sell in the American market securities of foreign Governments and foreign corporations in large quantities, after our investors have become accustomed through a period of many years to place their savings in domestic securities. The task would be difficult if American business men were not equipped to grasp new opportunities and to adjust themselves easily to new conditions. In former years so many attractive opportunities for capital investment have occurred within our own borders, that little occasion has existed to seek investments abroad. In fact, we have needed the surplus funds of other nations to aid in the development of our own natural resources. The war has now reversed our international position. It has made us a creditor instead of a debtor nation. It has given us the basis of a real merchant marine. It has compelled us to develop internation thinking and to appreciate that all sound investment opportunities are not confined within the borders of the United States.

"It's natural that investors who have been in the habit of buying domestic securities should not acquire quickly a habit of placing their funds in foreign securtes. There's no doubt, however, that our people will be willing to make those investments if they are insured that the investments are perfectly sound and are based on the same fundamental principles that underlie high-grade domestic investments.

"A foreign Government which is to offer its loans in the United States must assure our investment bankers that its record is clean, its fiscal policy sound, its Government stable and representative of its people, its banking system sufficient to provide for its commercial needs, its export trade composed of commodities which the other nations of the world need, and its revenues sufficient to provide for its expenses. Foreign corporations who are to offer their bonds in this market, must assure us that they have the same percentage of assets value back of their bonds that would be required of a domestic issue; that their funds over a series of years have been sufficient to meet interest payments and other fixed charges, with a good margin even during the most adverse periods; that their management is capable, and that the commodities and services which they have to sell are necessities and in constant demand.

"It may be asked what the international investment bond houses of America are doing to assure investors that foreign securities to be offered in this market will be safeguarded in regard to all these factors. We maintain a Foreign Department, made up of experts who study economic, banking, financial, and industrial conditions in all of the leading countries of the world. Data is collected from original sources in order to comprehend these and many other conditions. The leading economic and financial papers are taken from almost every country. Official Government and company reports are collected. Everything is done that possibly can be done to obtain such information that our purchases will be based upon actual facts. A staff which is able to collect such information and to maintain the information when it is collected, will surely be able to safeguard the interests of American investors.

"Some security holders may feel that the sale of foreign securities in large amounts throughout the United States will tend to depress prices of their present domestic securities. Such a view appears unwarranted. If England had reached a similar conclusion a decade ago, she would be today a small provincial nation. She has been willing to make her funds available for the development of natural resources in almost every part of the world, although, through that development, competition for her home industries has increased. The competition, however, has not made England a weaker power or depressed the price of her own securities in the London market, but has given England a commanding position among the nations of the world, and made London the financial clearing house of the world.

"The United States has entered into the affairs of the world in a big way. She cannot now afford to take a backward step. She must go forward. She cannot go forward without extending credits to foreign Governments and foreign corporations. Those credits cannot be extended unless laborers, business men, and professional men of America practice thrift and save something out of their income. These savings will give the United States the position in world finances to which her natural resources and the energies of her people entitle her."

TO FINANCE AUTO DEALERS.

General Motors Forms Subsidiary Company to Help Agents.

The General Motors Corporation has formed a subsidiary company, whose functions it will be to assist dealers in automobiles and motor trucks in financing their purchases. The concern, incorporated a few days ago under New York State laws, is called the General Motors Acceptance Corporation, with $2,000,000 paid in capital and $500,000 surplus. The stock was subscribed by W. C. Durant and associates in the General Motors Corporation.

Paul Fitzpatrick has been made Vice President and General Manager of the new concern, according to an announcement yesterday. He was formerly Vice President and Director of the Continental Guaranty Corporation, an organization formed several years ago to extend credit to buyers of automobiles. J. A. Haskell is President and Alfred H. Swayne is Vice President and financial manager of the Acceptance Corporation.

While the primary purpose is to finance automobile transactions, it is understood that the business in acceptances will take further ramifications. The du Pont interests are closely identified with the General Motors Corporation, and it is expected that credit facilities offered by the acceptance company will be made use of by the various du Pont enterprises.

At the close more Western firsts can be had at 59c than are being promptly taken, but there is some scarcity of prime Northern goods and these have a slightly higher value. Storage eggs quiet and easy. Nearby white eggs cleaning up fairly well in the best grades and prices steady. Apple Sales in Great Britain.

Consul General Skinner at London has cabled the Department of Commerce that the British Ministry of Food has noticed the representations that case and barrel apples of the same dimensions have different weights, and is issuing an amended order providing that importers shall be permitted to sell apples either by the barrel or box or by weight. Until the order becomes effective, however, sales will continue to be made by package.

Acceptance Business Nearing Billion Mark

In its leading article tomorrow The Annalist emphasizes the growing importance of trade and bank acceptances as media for the financing of large domestic and foreign commercial enterprises. This method of financing is rapidly becoming appreciated in the United States and it is approved by leading bankers and mercantile interests.

The article describes the organization and work of the Acceptance Council and quotes W. P. G. Harding, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and Paul M. Warburg, formerly vice-governor of the Federal Reserve Board, upon the development of the acceptance business.

There is also an article by Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue, in The Annalist tomorrow, advocating the continuance of high taxation as a means of promoting contentment and so destroying Bolshevism.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Free Credit Market Fails to Stimulate Stocks—Traction Bonds Steady.

The course of stocks in yesterday's short market session reflected few signs of exuberance among speculators over the lifting of restrictions on money, and the net result was much irregularity of prices at the close, with declines matching the gains in number and quality. Probably profit taking as the result of Friday's upward movement was a more influential factor on business than sentiment over the credit situation. It stands to reason that the Stock Exchange authorities in reporting to the Money Committee that there was "nothing to indicate the probability of a speculative movement which would absorb large amounts of money" had carefully surveyed the outlook within and without the market, and felt sure that a large bull campaign would not develop in the near future. A Saturday session, of course, was not one to supply a comprehensive test of speculative intentions, but it was noticeable in brokerage office comment that a quick expansion of trading for the rise was not the primary subject of discussion. In conservative quarters, where the removal of brokerage loan limitations had long been desired, the proposal was advanced no more for the purpose of freeing stock market operations of credit restrictions than for the expected effect in indirectly promoting a better feeling toward the credit of corporations whose securities are dealt in on the local markets.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit shares reached a new low point since the receivership occurred, influenced, presumably, by the intimations from banking quarters interested in the property that an assessment on the stock might be necessary. Traction bonds, however, were firm and dull. In the early advance of stocks, which was followed by the tendency toward irregularity, the steel issues stood forth prominently and also a number of the railroad stocks.

The statement of the Clearing House banks indicated a substantial easement in the loan position, and also a movement of funds away from New York. Loans declined $31,300,000, and demand deposits receded nearly $44,000,000. Despite these changes, the surplus reserve declined $18,500,000, a shrinkage which resulted in the main from a contraction of more than $23,000,000 in reserve credits with the Federal Reserve Bank. The Reserve Bank's report disclosed few changes of import during the week. Commercial paper rediscounts increased $13,000,000, while rediscounts based on United States Government securities declined $4,500,000. The gold reserve gained the relatively small amount of $4,200,000.

Germans Get Goods in Russia.

By the re-establishment of communication with the interior, definite information regarding the present situation in Western Siberia has been made available, according to the Weekly Bulletin of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce. It is reported that the population of the towns are destitute of all kinds of merchandise, and are looking to the Allies for help. Moreover, the Germans have commenced to export from Moscow and other distributing centres large quantities of the manufactured goods that are still left. They are especially exporting clothing and leather products to Germany.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Removing the Lid.

According to the general and popular interpretation of the statement which the so-callay Money Committee issued on Friday night, the "lid is off," so far as the call money market is concerned. But he would be an optimist indeed who could believe that brokers and their clients are to have all the bank accommodation—call or time—that they may ask for. There will be limits, most positive limits, beyond which the market may not go. Apparently, realization of something of this sort came to Wall Street just before the end of yesterday's first hour of trading, for a sharp and rather active advance came to an end at that time on selling which seemed to appreciate the early high levels.

No Fair Test.

The fact that yesterday was Saturday, with no deliveries of securities among brokers, and no call money market on the Exchange, of course prevented any demonstration in rates, and for this reason nobody can say what might have happened had there been a money market. But bankers who have been lending funds, and brokers who have been borrowing, were generally agreed that had there been a market there would have been no deviation from the usual orderly course. The market just now is narrow, with little public participation, and the demand for funds is not likely to exceed conservative proportions.

Bad Week for Cotton.

Last week was a decidedly unhappy one for the cotton market. Virtually all of the options, certainly all of the active trading months, recorded new low marks for the season; and at levels 15 cents or so below the high records for the period. January, which "went out" at noon on Friday, lost 15.35 points and the other near months suffered nearly as much. The far months did somewhat better, but even they were under severe pressure most of the time.

Want News of Rate Cuts.

There have been growing complaints in shipping circles over the manner in which the Shipping Board has been reducing ocean freight rates and exporters and importers are inclined to feel that they are entitled to advance information of these cuts so that they may base their business operations thereon. The recent cuts which have been announced by the Shipping Board have been so sudden it is said as to disturb to some extent the steady and necessary development of foreign trade. Shipping men and shippers want a stabilization of ocean freight rates so that they will have a firm basis to work from.

New Low Touched by B. R. T.

The intimation by Jacob H. Schiff in a speech before the Bond Club that an assessment might be necessary on the common stock of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company in order that funds might be provided for rehabilitation served apparently to further depress the stock in yesterday's short session. At one time during the trading the common shares fell to 18⅜, the lowest point of the year. From this level there was a recovery to 19¼, at which the stock showed a substantial loss for the day.

Steel Production Curtailed.

There seems to be no doubt that the steel companies are curtailing production, a natural procedure in view of the decrease in buying. The report of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation issued recently showed that company to have large orders on hand, and the same is true of other steel companies, these being bookings which were held up because of war demands. Work on such orders can of course proceed without there being additional buying for the present. This would still keep plants busy once a readjustment of machinery had been accomplished. Heavy buying of steel is not looked for until well along in the Summer.

Mexican Petroleum Lower.

Reports that one of the subsidiaries of the Mexican Petroleum Company had failed to get permission to drill additional wells in Mexico served to depress Mexican Petroleum yesterday. The fact was apparently overlooked that this was nothing new in the Mexican situation. All of those companies which refused to subscribe to the article of the Mexican Constitution which claims for Mexico a governmental right in the control of the privately owned oil lands, have not been allowed to do further drilling.

The Distilling Companies.

The prospect of early prohibition has raised some questions as to the future of those companies which have been engaged in distilling. Instead of forcing them out of business, it is apparently driving them into other fields, for most of them are preparing to continue rather than to liquidate. There is said to be a great future for industrial alcohol, which the distilling companies are qualified to enter upon.

CANADA'S MINERAL OUTPUT.

More Coal Produced Last Year, but Less Gold and Silver.

The Canadian Department of Mines, says Vice Consul Claude R. Michels, Calgary, Alberta, estimates the production of coal during the past year at about 15,180,000 short tons, as compared with 14,046,759 short tons during 1917.

The production of the more important metals during 1918 is estimated as follows: Gold, $14,756,000 in value; silver, 20,800,000 ounces; copper, 117,000,000 pounds; nickel, 91,500,000 pounds; zinc, 36,000,000 pounds; pig iron, 1,180,000 short tons; steel ingots and castings, 1,190,000 short tons. The production of these metals in 1917 was: Gold, $15,272,292 in value; silver, 22,221,276 ounces; copper, 109,227,332 pounds; nickel, 82,330,280 pounds; zinc, 29,663,764 pounds; lead, 32,076,221 pounds; pig iron, 1,170,480 short tons; steel ingots and castings, 1,745,734 short tons.

The total value of the mineral production in Canada during 1918 was probably not less than $220,000,000. The total value in 1917 was $189,646,820.

SUCCESS IN MAKING OPTICAL GLASS HERE

The Way in Which the Industry Was Developed to Meet the Needs of Wartime.

Of the many American industries which profited by the emergencies created by the war to reach standards of efficiency never attained, and in many cases hardly attempted before, one of the greatest triumphs was achieved by the optical glass and lens industry. Prior to the war the great majority of the best optical material came from Germany. The supply was quickly cut off and, when America entered the conflict, the need at once became urgent of furnishing eyes, as it were, to the army and navy, especially in the shape of binocular azimuths for range finders, battery commander telescopes, thousands of spyglasses—a different kind of telescope for the navy—and other material requiring clear and far-sighted lenses and the finest accuracy in instrument construction.

The demands were enormous, while the manufacturing facilities were not only unequal to the demand, but for the greater part were of an inferior capacity, and very soon there was a critical shortage of optical glass. In order to meet the situation, the Government created the Optical Glass and Instrument Division of the War Industries Board, and George E. Chatillon of this city, President of the firm of John Chatillon & Sons, was asked to become chief of that section. Mr. Chatillon finished his duties last month, and his report, recently submitted to the Government Board, reveals a remarkable series of successful accomplishments in which the ablest scientific men of various Government departments and in different parts of the country co-operated.

Mr. Chatillon, in speaking yesterday of some phases of the work, said that the first and prime demand was for optical glass.

"We could get none from France," he said, "where, although the optical industry had been very fairly developed, it was still far from being the equal of the same industry in Germany. England was in very much the same situation as America, and the industry there had to be developed on lines very similar to the work done in this country.

"When the Optical Glass and Instrument Division got to work it first invoked the assistance of the Government Bureau of Standards and the Geophysical Laboratory of the Carnegie Institute. They made many investigations to find the proper materials as to purity and quality. For the proper lens glass it was necessary to have a sufficient supply of sand absolutely free from iron. We were fortunate in finding a large quantity in this country, a great deal of it coming from Pennsylvania. The glass turned out met every test when subjected to that of the best imported glass. It was at once made in quantities by several factories, including the Bausch-Lomb Company of Rochester, the Spencer Lens Company of Buffalo, and the Pittsburgh Glass Company.

"The next problem was grinding the glass. Our best emery for that purpose had hitherto come from Turkey, and that field of supply was closed. Scientific investigation, however, developed a very high grade of an artificial abrasive, generally known as the Naxos emery, and that abrasive has been chiefly used. Prior to its successful use many leading manufacturers were very doubtful as to the ultimate success of this artificial American abrasive, but it has given highly satisfactory results.

"At the time the armistice was signed the American optical industry was getting at its peak load of manufacturing efficiency and had turned out many thousands of instruments for war use which were the equal in every respect of the best imported material. All of this work was done for war needs, and some modifications will be necessary for peace-time manufacture.

"It can be safely stated that the optical industry of America emerges from the war thoroughly equipped to compete in every way with the best foreign manufacturers upon whom we depended for our finest material before the war. What the future American trade will be in this respect is hard to prophesy at this time. Beside Germany, in the future when that country returns to a normal degree of industrial activity, we have two other strong competitors, France and England. The optical industry in France was more than doubled in capacity and is now more efficient than it ever was. England has also built up its optical industry in a wonderful manner, and it is quite possible that we will eventually find strong competitors in the trade of optical goods from both France and England."

Reduction of Spanish Exports.

In a cablegram received from Consul General Hurst, Barcelona, the total amount of declared exports to the United States and its possessions from Spain during the past year were valued as follows: $20,280,500 to the United States against $35,733,492 in 1917; $724,458 to the Philippine Islands against $985,330; $570,807 to Porto Rico against $887,593; making a total of $21,575,765 in 1918, against $37,606,415 in 1917.

British American Tobacco and the Tobacco Industry in the
United States

The British American Tobacco in their report for the year ending September 30, 1918, shows net profit, after deducting all charges and providing for Income Taxes for the year 1918, of £3,140,174 against £3,105,002 for 1917, before providing for excess profits duty for 1917, which is estimated at £500,000.

The company has declared a final dividend of 6%, making a total of 30% for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1918, and also an interim dividend of 6%. Both are payable Jan. 31, 1919.

British American Tobacco is selling on the London Stock Exchange far in excess of the prices prevailing in the New York market.

The termination of the war and the prospect of universal trade expansion throughout the world should make the coming fiscal year of the British American Tobacco Company another record breaker in the prosperous annals of that Company.

As far as this country is concerned, the figures of the Internal Revenue Department on the production of cigarettes during the last six fiscal years, furnish the most convincing exhibit of the phenomenal growth of the cigarette industry in the United States and go a long way to explain the high regard in which investors throughout the United States regard investments in the leading Tobacco Companies.

Cigarettes manufactured in the United States were as follows:

In 1913	14,294,895,471
In 1914	16,427,086,016
In 1915	16,756,179,973
In 1916	21,087,757,078
1917	30,529,193,538

In 1918
Over Forty Thousand Million

Four years of World War have left the Tobacco Companies in the most prosperous condition ever known, recalling the words of one of the most eminent tobacco men some years ago: "War Times and other periods of depression have never resulted unfavorably for the Tobacco Industry."

WELL-ESTABLISHED LINE OF TOILET PREPARATIONS.

If a woman of fashion has used the same kind of cold cream, the same kind of face powder, the same kind of balm—in brief, the same line of toilet preparations—for more than fifteen years, it should be a pretty good sign that there is merit in them.

If for just as long a period these same preparations have been used by a number of well-known society women, WHO ARE STILL USING THEM, what stronger testimony to their value could the average woman desire?

At least one complete line of toilet preparations enjoys this distinction. Yet, no attempt has ever been made to exploit it. The owner has so far been satisfied with the returns on sales to a limited circle of acquaintances, although there are customers in a number of American cities besides New York, and in England and France. The clientele has grown entirely by word of mouth, persons using them passing on the word to close friends that they had at last found the PERFECT cream, the PERFECT face powder, the PERFECT balm, and so on. The owner and advisers believe that with a live sales organization, backed by judicious advertising, there is a large profit in these preparations.

The owner would dispose of this business, either wholly or with reservation of interest, and would be pleased to go into details with any one seriously interested. No inquiry will receive attention unless accompanied by satisfactory assurance of financial responsibility of the writer. Address B 78 Times.

Sales of Women's Neckwear.

In the women's neckwear trade there is a brisk demand for stocks and jabots. Lace collars in filet and point de venise are selling well, both singly and in collar and cuff sets. Some very good advance orders have already been taken for these lines. In connection with pleatings and rufflings, some of the neckwear houses are showing organdie, chiffon, and net flouncings in many styles for graduation and commencement dresses.

Weather Not Good for Mufflers.

The continued warm weather so far this season has to some extent affected the sale of men's mufflers. The salesmen on the road are sending in reports to the effect that the orders now being taken for these goods are somewhat smaller than those received last year. Retailers are also complaining about the price, and many are buying just enough merchandise to carry them through the season.

Amount of Tin Imported.

The amount of metallic tin imported into this country during last November was about 4,935 long tons, as against 4,443 tons in October, and an average of 6,333 tons during the eleven months ended Nov. 30, 1918, according to a report issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Of the imports of bars, blocks, and pigs, there was a drop as compared with the year before in the imports from England and an increase in shipments from the Straits Settlements, the Dutch East Indies, Australia, and Hongkong. As showing the importance of this trade to the United States, the November tin imports from the Straits Settlements alone were valued at almost $6,000,000.

Not to Take South African Wool.

An end has been put to the proposition of having the British Government acquire the South African wool clip, as it has those of Australia and New Zealand. The American Consul General at Cape Town has sent this cable to the Department of Commerce on the subject: "British proposed wool purchase not realized, as stipulated minimum was not offered."

French Exports to This Country.

The total declared value of the exports from France to the United States and possessions during 1918 was $57,045,498, against $94,561,318 for 1917. The exports to continental United States were valued at $55,688,490 against $93,462,780 in 1917; to the Philippines, $1,273,724, against $955,074; Porto Rico, $85,418, against $141,110; Hawaii, no exports, against $1,449, and to the Virgin Islands, $867, against $905.

Italian Machinery Imports.

An association has been formed at Milan by the most important firms in Italy carrying on an import trade in industrial machinery and machine tools from allied countries. Its purpose is the study, protection, and promotion of all those interests appertaining to the importation of the articles mentioned.

The Merchant's Point of View

As the glamour of victory fades and the exaltation of feeling that goes with high emprise begins to subside, the commonplaces and every-day needs come to the fore. This is the condition which business in general is facing at the present. It is the prosaic that must be met—the cost of living which is typified by the loaf of bread. This is the determining factor in the purchasing power and buying inclination of the masses, upon which the whole business structure is reared. Behind the loaf of bread is the unground wheat, with a valuation fixed on it by the Government until the crop of 1920 is available of about one dollar a bushel in excess of its price in the world markets. The valuation fixes the price of the byproducts of the wheat, which are used for cattle feed, and in this way the cost of meats is enhanced. Every business man, no matter what his line, is convinced that there can be no real readjustment toward anything resembling normal until the wheat and the loaf of bread are put where they belong in the scale of prices, and that buying by the general public will lag until then. The high cost of living makes necessary a close scrutiny of expenditure by those of moderate means, who, in number, comprise the bulk of the people of these United States.

Public to Bear the Brunt?

That producers in many lines are aware of the general public expectation, that prices must come down at once has been made evident since the signing of the armistice in different ways. They have endeavored to meet this very reasonable expectation by reductions, some of which appear very drastic when compared with levels in vogue while hostilities were on. But it takes quite a time before the consumer gets the advantage of the reductions, and he is clamorous for obtaining them immediately. Week before last, for instance, the wholesale price of butter took a sudden drop of 10 cents, and it has since gone down more, but the householder when he went to his grocer did not get the advantage of it. Cases of this kind, which have been fairly frequent, do not conduce to peacefulness of mind on the part of the public. One reason for this is that they are so different than what was promised and, consequently, expected. It was, of course, known that the first steps toward peace would bring about a fall in prices. This was announced by and to producers and dealers and reiterated from time to time. All were told that they must put aside reserves from their extra profits to offset whatever losses might accrue when the inevitable drop came. All were also warned not to stock up too much while prices were soaring. Many, if not most, heeded the warnings and were prepared to accept the losses of the readjustment period. But their courage seems to have failed some of them, and they are now trying to make the public "hold the bag." And they seem amazed that the public is reluctant to do this.

Case of the Clothing Men.

Perhaps an extreme case of the futile hope of keeping up prices to the consumer is that of certain clothing manufacturers. At a convention in this city the other day they adopted a solemn memorandum expressing their belief that prices to the consumer next Fall would not be lower and might be higher. They were careful not to say that their prices would be as high as they are or would advance. Their utterance was for the purpose of giving encouragement to their customers, the retailers throughout the country, who are about reaching an anxious period. This Spring's clothing prices are to be higher than ever before, and the troublesome question is how the public will respond to them. Manufacturers have been making addresses to bodies of retailers in different parts of the country, trying, in most instances, to create the impression that, no matter what reductions there may be in other things, clothing prices must remain high. Last season, by insisting that there was a scarcity of wool and of fabrics, and that therefore prices of clothing must go up, they induced a number of retailers to stock up too much and at too high figures for their own good. In the smaller centres, particularly, stocks are still too large, and the retailers are in a quandary. So, to keep up their courage, the manufacturers indulge in the expression of a belief. But they are not unanimous in this regard. Thus, Alfred Decker of the firm of Alfred Decker & Cohn of Chicago told the West Virginia Retail Clothiers' Association the other day that people had been wearing their old clothes, and that "it only awaits the coming of lower prices to send the current into stores and turn all stocks of merchandise." He told his hearers to expect a drop in prices, and added: "As prices decline, costs will decline. The net result will be favorable to profits because, with the stimulus that lower prices will bring, volume will increase."

Reasons for Lower Prices.

Even the clothing manufacturers had their doubts as to the maintenance of high prices for this Spring. They knew that the levels for fabrics had been boosted beyond what the facts justified, and were fearful that these could not be upheld. So they managed to get guarantees from the makers of the cloths that prices would not be reduced. It was not until this was done that they went on with their purchases. But the case for next Fall is somewhat different. The silly pretense of a lack of wool has had to be abandoned. The world never had as much wool as it has now, and the quantity of shoddy is almost immeasurable. As a result, wool prices have had to come down. The Government, which is so large a holder of the article, has been obliged to bring down its quotations to those of the British issue prices. This will compel the manufacturers of woolens to reduce the prices of fabrics for next Fall. Some time next month at the latest, these prices will be set, and the clothing manufacturers will do their best to get them down to the lowest notch. A cut of 33 per cent. or more is not unlikely. Even with less of a reduction it will be a difficult matter to justify high prices for clothing. The retailer, especially after the strenuous experience he is likely to have this Spring, will have no enthusiasm for loading up with goods at prices anywhere near the wartime levels of prices. Despite, therefore, the solemn belief of the clothing manufacturers, it is fairly safe to assume that next Fall's prices of garments will be lower.

They Can't Buy So Much.

Quite a damper appears to have been put on the hopes of certain individuals in this country who believed the close of the war would afford them the opportunity to sell endless quantities of goods for use in clothing the peoples of France, Belgium, and other devastated countries and to provide the materials for reconstructing what had been destroyed. Several obstacles to these laudable ends have come to their notice. One of them is the lack of funds available to pay for the purchases. Another is the evident intention of the peoples in question to do what they can to rehabilitate their industries and, through the operation of these, to supply their own needs as far as possible, at the same time giving employment to their own workers. It is, of course, not settled in what form the indemnities they are to receive from Germany will be had, but it seems safe to assume that actual cash will play only a small part in this regard. The enforced labor of Germans in and out of the Fatherland, to provide raw materials such as coal and perhaps some finished products like certain kinds of machinery needed in factories, is likely to figure largely in the compensation. What the French and Belgians wish to accomplish as soon as possible is to get their industries in operation so that they may be able to get their artisans at work and not only provide for their own needs but also to take their place again as exporting nations. In the meantime, they are apt to buy only such things as are absolutely necessary. They are not afraid to wear old clothes for a while until their domestic industries are in a position to supply new ones—and, perhaps, for some time afterward. Thrift with them is natural, not acquired.

Values of Cotton and Fabrics.

Doubtless much of the downward slide in cotton quotations during the last week was the result of speculative activity. But some of it, at least, was due to the belief that the price of this article must come down in accord with the general trend of values. Decreased consumption in mills due to the slackening in the demand for cotton goods is another factor. At best it is a hard proposition to try and keep up inflated values for any raw material, and this can only be maintained when demand is active. Apparently one phase of this is being carefully taken into account in the cotton-growing districts, where they are trying to organize a $12,000,000 corporation to look after the marketing of the next cotton crop and see that it is fed out only as it is called for. The goods market is having problems of its own. Declining prices have brought out only a limited demand for fabrics, while the mills are being served with notice of further demands by their workpeople. Most of the trading has been confined to this and next month's deliveries, the uncertainties in the situation not being conducive to forward ordering. Guarantees against price reductions are being taken advantage of. This is especially true in regard to knit goods. The makers of the latter, as an organization, have not agreed upon this course, but have left it optional with each manufacturer to do as he pleases. And the result is that each one is giving the guarantee where it is necessary to get the business.

As to Wool and Woolens.

At the Government wool auctions in Philadelphia during the last week, better prices were realized, although the number of withdrawals continues to be large. The better kinds are the ones sought. If this keeps up there will be at the finish a lot of stuff on which the Government will have to take a large loss in order to get rid of it. At any rate the one great advantage resulting from the change in policy in the selling of wool has been to let domestic manufacturers get the raw material at the prices which prevail in Great Britain, now the world market for it. A sop has been thrown to the domestic wool growers in the announcement that all sales of wool owned by the Government which would compete with the home product will be discontinued between July 1 and Nov. 1. This is for the avowed purpose of not hurting the price of the domestic wools. It is a proceeding of doubtful expediency, since foreign wools may come in freely during the period. The goods market is showing little signs of life as yet. Samples for the next heavyweight season have been made up for both men's and women's wear, but little has been shown or disposed of. There is apt to be some delay before the mills are prepared to fix prices, and the cutters-up are not yet ready to enter into commitments. The mills are facing labor difficulties which may yet seriously curtail output, as they express the determination not to yield to the demand for an eight-hour day. As it is, most of them are only running on part time and some of them have not quite become readjusted to the civilian demand. There ought to be a clearing of the situation within the next two or three weeks.

RECEIVED BY THE MAIL ORDER MAN

How Various People Express Themselves in Telling of the Goods They Want.

Funny things happen in the mail order business, and the person whose duty it is to receive the orders often finds great amusement in the work.

For example, a certain well-meaning but misguided woman writes as follows: "Please send me two pounds of cake like sample inclosed." The "sample" inclosed in the communication was found to be a few dried-up crumbs.

The writer had evidently inclosed a piece of cake, proceeded to mail it, but by the time the registering machine got through with the letter and the time elapsed in the mail, the cake was transformed into a few stale, brittle crumbs.

Another lady, evidently with a keen imagination and much maternal pride, inclosed the photograph of a little girl, and asked that a hat be sent her which would become the owner of the photograph, specifying also, "the likeness was a decided blonde."

Here are anger and politeness:

"Dear Sirs: I receeve de stove which I by from you alright, but for why don't you send me no feet what is de use of de stove when he don't have no feet.

"What is de matter with you, is not my trade mondys so good like anoder man's, you are a fools no good I send you back at once your stove tomorro. Yours respectfuile.

"P. S. Since I rite you dis letter I find de feet in de oven excuse to me".

Here is a new contribution to the controversy as to what constitutes a family of proper size: "You put some shoe on my little families like this, and send in haste: one man, Jean St. Jean (me), 43 years; one woman Sophie St. Jean (she) 41 years; Hermedes and Lenore, 18 years; Olive, 14 years; Philippa, 12 years; Alexander, 12 years, Rosina, 11 years, Eugene, we lose him; Edouard and Elisa, 7 years; Adrien, 6 years; Camilla, 5 years; Zoel, 4 years; Joseph, 3 years; Moise, 2 years; Muriel, 1 year; Hilaire, he go barefoot.

"How Much?"

Another amusing order came from a little girl, evidently of foreign birth:

"Dear Gentlemen: I am a little girl, 12 years old, who came here from Italy two years ago and never yet bought any American clothes. I now want latest style American dress. Please send me, haste by mail, price of how much money I must give you to be dressed just like nice little American girl. I expect with pleasure your answer."

A lady, ordering a cap, sends the following: "Please send me a cap for my husband. His collars are size 16, and I should judge he would wear about an 18 or 20 cap."

Recently a most fastidious young gentleman ordered a pair of overalls. When secured he found therein the name of the sewing girl who made the garments. He promptly wrote her a letter with all the gush necessary in such a case, and in due time received a reply, which, however, was void of the romance usual in such cases. Here it is:

"I am a working girl, it is true, but I make a good living and do not care to support a husband, as I must do if I married some silly noodle who gets mashed on a girl he never saw and who gets her name by ordering a pair of 47-cent overalls by mail order."

A gentleman in the rural district wrote to the mail department for a pair of shoes, stating he wished a shoe with wide, square toes. Not having this style on hand (which was somewhat out of date) the concern in question wrote the gentleman as follows:

"We have your order for a pair of square-toed shoes.

"Permit us to state that these shoes are considerable out of date and are not being worn at the present time. We would suggest that you let us send you a pair of narrow, pointed-toed shoes, as these are the latest and we think they would suit you to perfection."

In reply came this letter:

"Gentlemen: Your letter received recommending narrow-pointed shoes. Note with interest you state they are being worn this season. This may possibly be true, but permit me to advise you I am still wearing my last season's feet."

IN THE HOSIERY TRADE.

Just Now Disturbed by Cancellations and Labor Troubles.

It was said in the hosiery trade yesterday by one of the local jobbers that the present situation is very peculiar. The general tendency on the part of the retailers is to depress the prices of merchandise and, as it appears, as though the prices must come down, they are canceling orders that were confirmed for Spring delivery. The average dealer accepts these cancellations, even though it is not good business, as he fears the loss of an account, perhaps a valuable one, in case the cancellation should not be accepted.

The jobber further stated that the cost of production has not decreased since the end of the war. In fact, there is now a strike taking place in Philadelphia where a good deal of the better grade of hosiery is manufactured. The knitters are demanding an increase of 25 per cent. in salary and an eight-hour day. It has been calculated by experts that an eight-hour day means a loss of one month's production in a year as compared with the present schedule. It would seem, therefore, that in this particular branch of the industry a reduction in price would mean profitless selling, and this is not likely to happen. On the contrary, in the near future an advance in the price of full fashioned hosiery may be looked for. The manufacturers of seamless hosiery are also facing serious labor disturbances, and a strike in this branch is likewise threatened unless at least the eight-hour day is agreed to.

TO PROTECT ITALIAN SILK.

State Agency Established to Stabilize Market Prices.

According to the bulletin of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce, a Central Silk Trade Office has been established in Italy under State control. Its function will be to protect the interests of this Italian trade. It will have charge of all purchases—at fixed prices—and sales of silk produced from the native silkworm.

The central office will be located with the Banca d'Italia in Rome, whose general manager is the President of the new organization, and two branch offices will be operated at Turin and Milan in connection with the same bank. It is stated in the press that the silk stocks in the country are fast accumulating in view of the restrictions on export trade and the difficulties connected therewith; and with the existing disparity of prices between Asiatic and Italian silk, Italian manufacturers are reported to be buying Chinese and Japanese varieties. It is believed that the office referred to has been created to better this situation and stabilize the market.

Variety in Gray Goods Sales.

A little more variety marked the dealings in the local gray goods market yesterday, though not much strength was shown. There were no large sales, but fair quantities of different constructions were disposed of, the sellers including both first and second hands. The deliveries were for the next two or three weeks. In printcloths, 39-inch 80 squares went at 15 cents, and the same width in 72-76s and 68-72s sold at 14 and 13½ cents respectively. Thirty-eight-an-a-half-inch 84-60s and 60-48s sold at 9¾ and 8¾ cents, respectively. Sales of 36-inch 5.50-yard sheetings were reported at 9¼ cents, and a fair share of gauze goods were also disposed of.

WHAT THE HAT MAN SAYS.

Chances of the Silk Tile for Men and Styles for Women.

President's Wilson's trip abroad may have the direct effect of bringing up the silk hat trade, says the head man in one of the firms doing a business in an exclusive line of men's and women's hats.

"It is all a question of dress," said he. "The President's trip will probably result in many functions over here. Men will put on their dress suits, they will want silk hats and they will have a devil of a time to get them and they will have to pay for them. We don't know just how the price will run, perhaps $120 a dozen, and men will pay $15 for hats they used to get for $8.

"The silk hat business for some time has been one of the things of the past. The Saturday before Easter in 1909, we brushed 626 silk hats in one retail store. That meant 626 men. We used to do a business of a quarter of a million dollars a year in silk hats. Last year we sold nine. Everybody in the trade knows that the silk hat makers who were expert workers have dropped out of the business. If our business in that line should be tripled or quardupled, we would not know how to handle it.

"A man comes in and buys a hat at retail now and that is the last we see of him. At one time a man would buy a silk hat and decide he needed a few others. Now he buys his one soft hat, looks it over at home, sends it around the corner to be cleaned, and puts it on again."

Business in the exclusive hat trade for men and women is reported good, people buying at any price, and shipments scheduled for February hurried up for January to meet the big demand for an early supply. There is nothing new in the straw hats which will be worn in the Summer. They were all made under the Government restrictions and there has been no change as yet. It is reported that the stiff hats for men may come in again. Tailored hats for women have been strong during the last two years. Whether the fact that the many women wearing uniforms have looked well in the trig styles will result in the continued wearing of the simple hat or whether there will be a reaction of favor of furbelows and more fluffy styles no one knows, the hat man says, except the wind which blows public opinion, and it can never be told where that comes from or which way it will go.

Damasks and Tapestries Going.

The sale of damasks and tapestries in the local jobbing trade has been steadily increasing during the past week. The demand for these fabrics has been greatly stimulated by the furniture trade, which is using large quantities in connection with the new Spring lines. Orders that have been received from the West are well in proportion to those of last year, and a good volume of business is being obtained by the men on the road. The orders that are being taken in the local trade are not so large, but they are being duplicated very often.

1918 $51,978,171

Is it reasonable that responsible Manufacturers and Wholesalers would have voluntarily sold us $55,421,258 of Accounts in 1918 if it had not been profitable to them? We have no requirements as to time or volume.

You have Accounts Receivable only because you can't sell your merchandise for cash. What is the real difference if you sell merchandise on account and then sell the Accounts for cash, if you can make more money by doing so? The cash is of the same use to you whether received from the sale of merchandise for cash or on account.

Wide-awake concerns figure out how they can make more money with our money than it costs them—a clean additional profit. They can make the discounts on their purchase bills and thus improve their credit—they then owe less and can be more independent.

We only solicit Manufacturers and Wholesalers worth $20,000 to over $1,000,000 whom we can trust to collect the accounts they sell us, so as to avoid disturbing their customers with notices. Their customers, their banking connections and their business organization are not disturbed in dealing with us.

Let us show you how to turn your profit-less Accounts into cash working capital—and at the expense of others.

Put Your Business On a Cash Basis

What would it mean to you if all your transactions were for cash? If you could take advantage of all discounts, receive your money from customers as soon as goods were shipped, thus keeping your capital working ALL the time instead of being tied up on open accounts?

You can accomplish this—at once—by availing yourself of the service offered by the Manufacturers' Finance Company. We buy your accounts receivable (not past due) and all shipments as soon as made, thus converting your book assets into cash which is immediately available for further expansion of your business.

This service is CONFIDENTIAL, as you collect the accounts for us in your usual way without disturbing your relations with your customers or interfering with your other financial arrangements.

Progressive manufacturers who have sold us their accounts for years testify that our service has strengthened their credit, increased their margins of profit, speeded up turnover and enabled them to expand their volume of business WITHOUT INCREASING THEIR CAPITAL.

By using our service you can do this. Besides, it safeguards your credit, especially during your heavy seasons, without disturbing any of your other assets.

You use our service only as the need arises—you are not obligated as to volume.

Let us send you more complete details—there is no red tape about availing yourself of the many advantages of our service

The Question of Profit

Cost
Overhead—Fixed Expense
Selling Price

PROFIT	is the object of business.
SELLING PRICE	in excess of Cost, Overhead and Fixed Expense determines gross profits.
IF	your overhead and fixed expense can be distributed over a larger volume than you now do, you automatically lessen the average cost of your merchandise.
INCREASE IN VOLUME	therefore gives you two clear gains: 1st—the new profit on the increase. 2nd—the additional profit on the old volume.
USUAL TERMS OF SALE	means that your customer controls the time of payment and makes your Capital absolutely idle for you until he decides to pay.
OUR PLAN	of cashing your accounts immediately frees your capital for a new turnover—your volume increases—your overhead and fixed expense do not—your selling price is the same and profits increase. On a thirty-day turnover an increase of $100,000 in a year's volume costs $1,000.
BECAUSE	the total expense is 1-30 of 1% per day (1% per month) figured to the exact number of days until payment—no commissions, no exchange.

TO SELL RARE BOOKS AT COMING AUCTION

Collection from the Townsend Library Includes Many Original Cruikshank Drawings.

THE ARTISTS REPRESENTED

Many Examples of the Work of Rowlandson, Gilliray, Aiken, John Leech, and Others.

The notable and extensive collection of illustrated books and caricatures from the library of J. Barton Townsend of Philadelphia, including original issues of the books of Isaac, George, and Robert Cruikshank, Thomas Rowlandson, James Gilliray, Henry Aiken, John Leech, and others will be sold at the American Art Galleries on Feb. 4, 5, and 6. It comprises one of the finest collections of its kind ever offered at public sale in America. Many of the volumes are in full morocco or calf bindings by Riviere, Tout, Zachusdorf, Sangorski, Sutcliffe, Larkins, and Root. A large number are in the original bindings, while a few are in the original parts or wrappers as issued.

Joseph Adshead's "Prisons and Prisoners," London, 1845, first edition, has an etched frontispiece, "Newgate—Prison Discipline," by George Cruikshank. Henry Aiken is represented, among other items, by "Real Life in Ireland," and an original drawing in colors, "Life as It Is; or, Jack's Wedding Day," signed by the artist. Angelo's "Highland Broadsword Exercise," London, Jan. 20, 1799, first edition, has six colored aquatint pictures by Thomas Rowlandson. Richard H. Barham's "Ingoldsby Legends," first edition, has nineteen etchings, eight of which are by George Cruikshank and the remainder by John Leech.

"The Naval and Military Exploits, Which Have Distinguished the Reign of George the Fourth," by J. Austin, London, 1820, is a work of unusual interest to the American collector, more than 200 pages relating to the American Revolution and the War of 1812.

"The Bon Ton Magazine," London, 1818-21, is one of the scarcest periodicals of the time. George Cruikshank is believed to have executed some of the unsigned plates, as he illustrated, for the same publisher, the rare "Table Talk" and "The Scourge." "The Contrast," London, 1787, with etchings by Isaac Cruikshank, has the following pencilled note by J. H. Brunton on the front endpaper: "The first book illustrated by a Cruikshank. The only copy known to me, probably unique." "Swearing in at Highgate in 1796" is an original sepia drawing by Isaac Cruikshank. "The Martyrdom of Louis XVI., King of France," is a proof impression before letters, colored, with the title, line of quotation, and publisher's line, and an autograph of Isaac Cruikshank. "The Dance of Death Modernized," designed by G. M. Woodward, etched by I. Cruikshank, is his original impression of this rare caricature.

The books illustrated by George Cruikshank include "The Impostor Unmasked," London, 1806; "The Beggar's Opera," London, 1810; "The Scourge," London; 1811-15, a fine set of one of the rarest of all works illustrated by him; "The Conundrum," London, 1812; "The Annals of Gallantry," London, 1814-15, the first and only edition of this work; William Combe's "Life of Napoleon," London, 1815, first edition; "The Whim-sical Song Book for 1814," one of the rarest of all Cruikshank items; "The Humorist," London, 1819-20, first edition; David Carey's "Life in Paris," London, 1822, first edition; "The Death Fetch," London, 1826, unique copy from the Truman collection; "The Dolphin," London, 1827, Cruikshank's own copy; W. H. Ireland's "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte," Cruikshank's issue of this precious work; "The Comic Almanack," London, 1835-53, first edition of each volume; "More Hints on Etiquette," by Charles Dickens, London, 1858, a presentation copy from Cruikshank to W. H. Merle.

There are also "The Gipsy Mother," London, 1840, unknown to Douglas, Marchmont, Cohn, and Reid; "George Cruikshank's Omnibus," London, 1841-42, fine copy of the first edition as issued in the original parts; Sir Francis B. Head's "The Emigrant," London, 1846, first edition; "Stop Thief!" London, 1851, first edition, presentation copy from Cruikshank; complete set of the "Fairy Library," one of the finest ever offered at public sale in America; "A Slice of Bread and Butter," London, 1837, first edition, Cruikshank's own copy with manuscript corrections in his handwriting; "The Worship of Bacchus," London, 1865, from Lord Wexborough's library; Cruikshank's "Alphabet of Oddities," London, undated, unknown to all bibliographers, no copy in the British Museum, and "The Bottle," London, undated, fine copy of this rare issue.

Among original drawings by George Cruikshank are "Bang-Up-Random," with unpublished water color drawing; "The Horrid Murder of Elizabeth Beasmore," pen-and-ink sketch, and pencil sketch representing Cruikshank's godson, and autograph letter. Included in his political caricatures and etchings are: "Little Boney Gone to Pot," "The Mother's Girl," "The Funeral Procession of the Ranys," illustrations of the reign of George III., "Coriolanus addressing the Plebeians," from the collection of Mrs. Cruikshank; "The Modern Hannibal," "The Theatrical Atlas," "A Bus in a Box; or, The Poet in a Pub, with a Chip of the Block," and "All the World a Stage."

Included in the books illustrated by the joint efforts of George Cruikshank and his brother Robert, and etchings with autograph inscription by George identifying each work as his own or Robert's, are: "The Fashionable Swindler," 1812; "The Busy Body," "The British Stage," Pierce Egan's "Life in London," Egan's "Finish to Adventures of Tom, Jerry, and Logic," 1830, and "London Characters," London, undated. Among the books illustrated by Robert Cruikshank are "Lessons of Thrift," London, 1830; "Tom and Jerry in France," 1820; "The Wit's Album," first edition; "Wonder of the World," 1822; C. M. Westmacott's "English Spy," London, 1825-26; "The Old Sailor's Jolly Boat," "Chronicle of the Bastile," "The Miller and His Men," London, circa, 1832. There are a large number of drawings and aquatint engravings by Robert Cruikshank; caricatures by him relative to Maria Foote, the actress, and her friends; to the troubles between Queen Caroline and George IV.; to British politics, the Catholic question, song birds, dandies, sporting, domestic and social scenes.

Besides the three Cruikshanks noted above, there are a few examples of the work of Percy Cruikshank, the son of Robert, and of George Cruikshank, Jr., the son of Percy. The latter at first signed his plates "George Cruikshank, Jr.," but in order to do away with the confusion created by this he changed the same, at the request of the great George, assumed his mother's family name, and signed himself "George Calvert Cruikshank."

Of equal importance with the Cruikshank collection is that section containing examples of the celebrated caricaturist, Thomas Rowlandson, whose compositions, as represented herein, comprise the most extensive series of books and caricatures by his hand ever offered at public sale in America. This section comprises 198 different items or groups of subjects, commencing with the first book illustrated by him, and including a large proportion of the more noteworthy and finer examples of his work, while his original water color work and sketches are represented by four different subjects and a volume of collected sketches.

The Napoleonic caricatures in color comprise more than 100 different subjects, illustrative of the wars of Bonaparte, and satirizing the great Emperor and the French people from 1799 to the downfall of Napoleon in 1814. They are by Isaac and George Cruikshank, James Gilliray, Thomas Rowlandson, and others.

The great caricaturist of the latter eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, James Gilliray, is represented by several collections of his satirical and humorous prints, illustrative of the time of George III. In this art he had no rival; the exquisite tact with which he seized upon points, both in politics and manners, most open to ridicule, is only equaled by the consummate skill and art with which he satirized them. Most of his work was etched at once upon the original copper without a previous drawing, his only guide being sketches of the characters made on small pieces of card, which he always carried with him.

Among other illustrations are found examples of the work of H. Bunbury, William Heath, H. K. Browne, "Phiz," Robert Seymour, and G. Woodward.

Week's Service Board Hearings.

Godfrey Goldmark, chief counsel of the Public Service Commission, has announced that during the week the commission will hold public hearings in relation to the power and servce of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, of the adequacy of the service furnished by the New York and North Shore Traction Company, and concerning the service, equipment, &c., of the surface lines of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. There will also be hearings in relation to the service of the Brooklyn Borough Gas Company, the Brooklyn Edison Company and on an application of the City Island Motor Bus Company for authority to issue $8,000 of capital stock.

Full Speed Ahead : The Mid-Winter Sale of

GOOD FURNITURE

LAST week we told you that only our own regular stock of furniture was included in the sale. But we can't say that today—not by a jugful. As a matter of fact the unprecedented selling of the past week would have played havoc with our assortments had we not filled up the gaps with new goods. Be assured, however, that the reinforcements are of the true Bloomingdale standard—goods which we had on re-order and which have now been rushed to the front. In every case they have been marked exactly the same prices as were their counterparts in the early days of the sale.

THE LEAGUE FOR RIGHT.

There can be no doubt that the world league has advanced in practicality during the last week. It is equally sure that it has advanced in that respect at the sacrifice of extreme pretensions by some of its foremost promoters. What is emerging from the conflict of ideas resembles more a court than a parliament. That is because there has been found more need for enforcing what law there is than for making new law. There even has been found good opinion of jurists that there is law for the punishment of the Kaiser for crimes done in the name of war, but contrary to the laws of war, and therefore not excused by hostilities. There are specific questions before the Allies demanding immediate settlement, and the means for enforcing the decisions of the Allies already exist. In the present situation there is something which distinguishes it from previous occasions in which the Allies have enforced their wills in Europe, and which likens it to the settlement of our civil war.

That was an unconditional surrender to written law in our Constitution. This is to be a settlement according to unwritten law recognized by the practice of all worthy to be included in the league of civilization. In form Germany surrendered to military force, but it was the weapon of those who themselves bow to the same law as that imposed upon its violators. There are not two laws, one for Germany's punishment and another for the Allies' profit. There is but one world law, and for the first time it is to be enforced in the Old World as a mandate of conscience as well as of cannon. The Allies are to enforce justice, not their wills. Their reward will come from future peace more than from the parting of the raiment of the sinners. Interests are not the chief motive, force of any league to which the United States is a party. As President WILSON said at Manchester, "Interest does not bind men together. Interest separates men. Only one thing can bind men together, and that is common devotion to right."

The utterances of the last week on both sides the ocean illustrate these points. The British plan calls for a big navy to keep the seas free. The French plan calls for big armies to keep the peace on land. The league to enforce law would be a comparative failure if the world were to be burdened with war debts, and with the pre-war costs of armament, too. Nor could the league to enforce law enact laws compelling disarmament, for it has no right to make laws. But if it enforces existing laws the questions of land and water forces may be left to the future. The nations will disarm as soon they think they safely may, and there is nothing to fear from armies and navies used according to the law of right. Accordingly, the idea of an armed league to enforce world law has fallen into the background for two reasons. As Lord ROBERT CECIL said, the world is not ready for a rigid system of preserving peace, and absolutely binding powers over and between nations are not yet feasible. And, as several have said on this side the ocean, the existing league is sufficient for the purpose. DAVID JAYNE HILL and JAMES M. BECK expressed the general dislike here for the creation of a superstate to control the policies, interests, and conduct of individual sovereignties. But both thought that there was force enough in the adjudication of the Allies, thus creating a precedent which will control the nations hereafter. Mr. BECK found a likeness between the alliance against Germany and a vigilance committee of good citizens, extemporized for the occasion. That is not a dignified or exact comparison, but it indicates somewhat the sort of league which promises to result in the near future.

There are questions enough to come before this international law and order committee. China wants its treaty with Japan revised. Mexico wants the sanction of the league for its proposals toward foreigners. A declaration on the merits between Italy and the Jugoslavs would make another little war unlikely. A baker's dozen of new little nations would surely quarrel if any of them thought some were favored at the cost of others, as some must be if racial and boundary questions are to be settled by them for themselves instead of in the common interest. And several secret treaties between leading Powers need to be tried by an acid test of their conformity to the common good under universal law. Self-determination is a right, but not the only right, nor even the chief right. The right of all is superior to the right of any, and large nations must make sacrifices as well as small if the world hereafter is to be ruled by law instead of by self-interest and force.

Some of these questions are not pressing, being merely the seeds of future troubles. Many of them may and should be postponed. The league to enforce law by the sword, the world's first, will have done enough if it adjudicates Germany's case, and sets up court machinery for the adjudication of others at leisure. The world is not yet ready to accept statutes from a superparliament, nor to accept discipline from a composite military force until there shall arise another Germany to create another world alliance.

ROOSEVELT DAY.

Sunday, Feb. 9, is to be Roosevelt Day throughout the nation. The President has honored himself by his hearty assent. On that day the whole country will do honor to one of its great men and great Presidents. There will be a permanent memorial, the nature of which is yet to be decided. The only difficulty to be met with will be in choosing among the many suggestions coming from all parts of the nation. Perhaps, if the Colonel himself could be consulted, the thing he would like best would be to have his name associated with a great museum of natural history.

The honoring of this great man and true American will be a national labor of love. The bitter animosities he aroused during his lifetime are dead, not so much because he is dead, too, as because they never had any real life in them. It was a curious thing, and often noticed, that whenever he ceased for even a short time to be active in the public mind animosity died away, and his most virulent enemies began to talk kindly of him. That phenomenon was observable, for instance, when he disappeared in the South American wilds. When he got back and plunged again into political controversy, animosity returned to life. This makes it plain that the enmities he aroused were the enmities of a fighting man, and could last only while he was delivering and receiving blows. When he was not actually in a fight, it was impossible to resist his charm; and now he will fight no more.

While the magic of his personality remains with us, and so much with us that it is as yet difficult to realize that he is dead, it will be impossible to appraise his place in history. But whatever it may be, it will be a high place. In honoring him on Roosevelt Day we will be honoring one of the great names in American history.

MORE LIGHT NEEDED.

It is not a good omen for the success of the plan proposed by the Paris Supreme Council for the solution of the Russian problem that the project has unreserved approval only from Bolsheviki and their sympathizers. In this city the active partisans of Bolshevism welcome the proposal of the Princes' Islands conference with representatives of the Russian groups, including the Bolsheviki. In England newspapers of known pacifist tendencies that have cherished the delusion that the Bolsheviki represent Russian democracy are even more outspoken in praise of the conference plan. In Paris full approval is expressed by the leading Socialist paper only.

This is not a good beginning, but it is only half the story. The representatives of the Omsk, Archangel, and other anti-Bolshevist groups in Paris, who were at first reported to favor the plan, denounce it unsparingly on the ground that the civilized world can have no dealings on equal terms with traitors and assassins. Conservative opinion in England, France, and America regards the conference with serious misgivings, approves it only with many reservations. In criticism of the statement in which agreement was officially announced, it is pointed out that not the slightest moral distinction is made between the Government groups represented by men who have been unswervingly faithful to the allied cause, men who, it is believed, represent the vast majority of the people of Russia, and the Bolsheviki who betrayed the Allies, who made a traitorous peace with Germany, whose hands are stained with the blood of thousands of their fellow-Russians, whose announced purpose it is to destroy the middle class altogether, who, in fact, are enemies of society, criminals in purpose and in deed. Sweden, even, a Power that was not too sympathetic with the Allies, expels the representatives of the Bolsheviki on the obvious ground that it is impossible to enter into diplomatic intercourse with such persons.

We have already advanced a theory which might be held to justify the extending of the invitation and the form of an announcement. It is that the Supreme Council, being informed that the Bolsheviki were already at the end of their rope, about to disappear as a force for evil and trouble, felt that it might safely treat with Russian representatives in the belief that it would have to deal only with men speaking for groups representing reasonable Russian opinion. If information of that character was available in Paris, the Supreme Council might have felt that it could safely assume an impartial attitude, extending the invitation to all groups. If this was not the case, if the Supreme Council really had it in mind to meet in conference representatives of the Bolsheviki still active, powerful, and unrepentant, then the invitation and the form of the announcement cannot be justified to the moral opinion of the world. The Allies and the United States could never be justified in accepting any assurances from the Russian Bolsheviki. The negotiations would be fruitless, for they are faithless. With such enemies civilization does not negotiate; it must put them down or be put down itself.

Much more light is needed on the motives that prompted the decision taken at Paris. If, as indicated in our Paris dispatches yesterday morning, it was the result of a compromise between opposing opinions, to the end that the Peace Conference might not begin in disagreement, then it can be only said, as of many compromises, this one can bring no satisfaction. If the Bolsheviki are not about to be eliminated, then the Allies will find themselves treating with a treacherous and implacable enemy. If there were not grounds for the decision such as all the Governments could accept as sound and satisfactory, then it ought not to have been reached. Certainly, there should have been some advance assurance that the proposal would be acceptable to Russian groups other than the Bolsheviki. It now appears that they will pretty unanimously reject it. That is the opinion of Mr. DILLON in Paris, who is very well informed upon Russian affairs. It is denounced by Russians because it gives the Bolsheviki a respite at a moment when repeated defeats have brought them to desperate straits. It has been pointed out in many quarters that an agreement to receive the Bolsheviki as equals necessarily gives dangerous encouragement to their sympathizers the world over, and of that class we have altogether too many in this country.

It was a strange decision for the Supreme Council to take unless its members saw clear ground ahead of them. As to that, the world has no source of information whatever, it has no resource but conjecture. The principle of "open covenants openly arrived at" has its necessary limitations, but the people of the United States, Great Britain, and France will be quite unable to understand the plan of the conference upon the Princes' Islands until the Council has satisfactorily revealed the processes of its reasoning and the motives of its action.

WOMEN LAWMAKERS.

In Great Britain last December not one woman candidate for the House of Commons was elected; in Ireland one female Sinn Feiner. The women were voting for the first time. Some or most of the feminine candidates were able and distinguished. The woman voters were a majority. They seem to have felt, most of them, and a majority of the male electors, too, that the bestowal of the franchise did not imply necessarily any immediate participation of women in the actual work of legislation. It may be that a sort of social conservatism lingers even among the extreme political and social changes swiftly made in the war. At any rate, the result of an election by many others than the Asquith Liberals regarded as superfluous, was certain. Interest could not be keen. In the work of reconstruction there will be much for which women have a special fitness; but, be the reasons what they may, the woman nominees were beaten.

In Germany, where a certain acknowledged inferiority of the woman to the man was evident before the war, where the attitude of the man to the woman seemed to be either condescending or contemptuous, where the inequality of the sexes was an accepted principle and fact, and the Kaiser apparently regarded woman as merely a domesticated animal—in Germany, the old-fashioned, thirty-four women have been chosen delegates to the National Assembly, nearly a twelfth of that body on which so great a duty is laid. The Majority Socialist woman delegates are fifteen in number, the Minority Socialist five.

Among these moderate and immoderate radicals, perhaps the emergence of women into office is less surprising. In Spartacan heat and fury a woman may easily go far, as ROSA LUXEMBURG showed, but she was German by marriage and naturalization only. The Majority Socialists are divided by no sharp line from other Germans. A priori, who would have said that either among the bourgeois leaders of this, the most powerful German party, or among the millions of workingmen in its membership, there would have been any desire to exalt women politically except in so far as their votes might be useful to men?

Is it not the case that the tasks, the hardships, the total care of the household thrown upon so many millions of German women during the war, have made them at once more thoughtful, more powerful, more respected in the sense of equality, than they were before the war?

The two Socialist parties represent, on the whole, the social classes, strongest in the cities, that suffered most from scarcity of food and high prices. It would be natural that their woman delegates should be out of proportion to their numbers. One-eighth of the Minority Socialist delegates are women; between one-tenth and one-eleventh of the Majority Socialist delegates are women.

The Christian People's, the old Centrist, Party has seven woman delegates among its ninety-three, a little smaller proportion than that of the Majority Socialists. This tendency to feminism cannot be attributed to "the influence of the Church." It seems to show that the same influences, fruits of the same experiences, sufferings, hopes, are common to women of all parties. The Democratic Party has five woman delegates out of seventy-five. Here the proportion is not smaller than might be expected in a moderate bourgeois party, composed in the main of the more liberal wings of old business and industrial parties, National Liberals and Progressives. Even the Conservative coalition has four woman delegates. What becomes of the German conservatism which a traveler might curiously study before the war?

MODIFYING THE BLOCKADE.

The relaxation of the blockade against Germany is something more than a question of allowing her to resume her commerce with any country in any degree. Favors for Germany, who must pay the price of her iniquities, are not to be thought of. Germany will be on probation for an indefinite time. But it is not humane to deprive the Germans of food, or to keep them on war rations a day longer than is necessary. They have lost the war, largely because their coast was in a state of blockade for more than four years, and they cannot resume hostilities. Nor is it the part of wisdom to deny the German people the use of lubricating oils for their railways, which must be used for the transportation of food and essentials. Clothing and industrial supplies they must have if they are not to become dependent for a long period upon the victors for support.

Now that the Germans are in good faith laying the foundations of a responsible Government, no such handicap as a close blockade should be imposed upon them. The blockade should be modified to permit of sea traffic to supply food that is imperatively needed, also necessaries for the resumption of domestic industry. From America's hoard of wheat and other products, which is greater than our people require and enough, with proper regulation, to relieve a good deal of the distress in Europe, there can be spared a portion for our late enemy.

Great Britain is not solely dependent upon the United States and Canada for wheat and other foodstuffs. She has Australia and Argentina to draw on, and accordingly has canceled some of her contracts with us. There is no longer a good or politic reason why the United States should not export some of her surplus to Germany, who can furnish unsurrendered merchantmen for cargoes, and probably pay for what she gets. Blockade restrictions should not stand in the way. Arrangements can be made that will give Germany no undue advantage and protect the interests of the Allies. With the Peace Conference in session, a beginning can be made, under Mr. HOOVER'S authority, to relieve the German people without sacrifice of the righteous and proper demands of the lesser allies and the neutrals upon us. No trade for Germany at the present time but the essentials she really stands in need of as a defeated nation.

AIR TRAFFIC PLANS.

The French aviator JULES VEDRINES, who alighted on a roof in Paris the other day in an ante-war machine, is planning to make the circuit of the earth in an airplane of the latest model. People may say that the veteran is riding a runaway imagination, but what he proposes is practicable if the Atlantic, the widest body of water to cross, can be traversed. May the tribe of the Vedrines increase, for they are the doers of great things in the air and no enterprise appals them. Better to plan with them and have faith in the attainable, than to scoff and be a drag upon progress. Ten years hence who will be brave enough to say that he did not foresee the wonders of aeronautical achievement?

If JULES VEDRINES, a pioneer in long-distance flying, seems to be a sensationalist, will the British Air Ministry be put in the same category? Hardly, because it is a Government organization and developed the most efficient flying service of the great war. In a paper on the use of aircraft for commercial purposes the Air Ministry turns to the victories of peace and sees air liners cleaving the sky and linking continents together, airplanes winging their way over land routes of a thousand miles and less to make connection with the leviathans, and fast freight moving aloft at a speed of eighty-five miles an hour. The imagination of JULES VEDRINES is not so erratic after all.

The British Air Ministry cannot give itself up to visions; it must have sound reasons for its faith. So it goes into details of practical commercial aeronautics. Dirigibles much larger and more powerful than the German Zeppelins of the war period have been projected in England. The Air Ministry has drawn plans of a ship with a capacity of 10,000,000 cubic feet and 6,000 horsepower. Its length would be 1,100 feet, its range of travel 20,000 miles, and maximum speed eighty-five miles an hour. For three weeks it could stay in the air, is the calculation, with a crew of six officers and twenty-six men. Jogging along at a moderate rate of speed, this ship should be able to bring London within three days of New York. A record of two days might soon be established in favorable weather. Does it seem fantastic? Not at all when the advance of dirigibles in speed and cruising power is considered. In 1914 the Zeppelins reeled off fifty miles an hour and stayed up less than a day; four years later their maximum speed rose to seventy-seven miles an hour, and at a rate of forty-five miles an hour they could keep going for 177 hours. A British dirigible of the R-38 class (2,720,000 cubic feet capacity) has an estimated cruising endurance of 211 hours, almost nine days, at a speed of forty-five miles an hour. It is announced that the Admiralty has nine airship stations and several dirigibles that could be used for commercial purposes.

Lisbon to New York, with airplanes bringing passengers from Great Britain and all parts of the Continent, seems to be regarded as a desirable route for the big airships. Mr. BONAR LAW flew to the Peace Conference in an airplane the other day, and it is said that the British representatives will use the air route in going to and fro; so there is nothing remarkable about employing planes as passenger feeders to the dirigibles scheduled to leave for New York. What of the weather, the waves of the air, as a deterrent? It is expected that the liners and freighters will be able to ride safely any storm that cannot be evaded by good airmanship. Strong winds are common enough above the British Isles, and yet in 1918 there were only eleven days when flights were not made. What of the cost of these projects that would have been so astounding a few years ago? It is estimated that the 1,100-foot dirigible would cost from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, but would soon pay for itself in passenger and express freight traffic.

CAPRONI, WRIGHT, and CURTISS will have something to say about giant airplanes to compete in some measure with the big dirigibles; the Italian inventor is even now building a heavier-than-air ship to make the Atlantic passage this coming Spring or Summer. If he or one of his rivals spans the Atlantic successfully, commercial aeronautics will thereafter develop rapidly. Is America to be last in the race, as she was in the construction and use of the war plane when she should have anticipated the late conflict and been triumphantly first, the leader in military aeronautics?

GERMAN PARTIES.

The result of the German elections is to put the control of the body which will make the new Constitution into the hands of the most trustworthy elements of Germany. By far the strongest party representation—nearly twice as great as any other—is that of the Majority Socialists, with 166 out of 421 members of the Constituent Assembly—nearly 40 per cent. But in this war-time election no less than in peace this vote can hardly be taken as an indication of adherence to the Marxian doctrine. Just as in the old days before the war many people voted for Social Democratic candidates in Germany because the Social Democrats were the only real Liberal party, the only party which stood for apparently honest opposition to Kaiserism and Junkerdom, so now many people voted for the Majority Socialist candidates because they represented the faction actually in power, which had so far run the country since the armistice without getting it into any serious trouble; and many others because they thought that of all the parties which at the moment had any chance of gaining control of Germany the Majority Socialists were the least dangerous. It must not be forgotten that the force of circumstances in the last two months—notably the conflict with the Spartacus group—has made the Majority Socialists appear to stand for little more than what the Progressive Party stood for in 1912. Marxian doctrinaires they certainly are not at the moment, nor do they seem likely to be.

Next in size is the Christian People's Party, heir of the old Centre, and, with its ninety-three members, less powerful than the Centre used to be in proportion to the others. It appears that the experience of the war has weakened the Church's hold on many soldiers. Not far behind the People's Party—these three are far ahead of all others—come the Democrats, with seventy-five seats. These are perhaps of all the most sympathetic to the average non-Socialist sentiment in allied countries. Their leaders include some highly questionable personalities, such as SOLF and BERNSTORFF, but also others who are far less so than most Germans. Indeed, in respect to leadership the Democrats outshine the Majority Socialists, for SCHEIDEMANN and his colleagues were so zealous in support of the Kaiser, so long as it looked as if the Kaiser would win, that nobody outside of Germany is going to trust them more than is necessary. As for the Democrats, while in the main they supported the Government pretty loyally during the war, there can hardly be any doubt that if their opinions had been dominant in 1914 the war would never have been started.

The Democrats and the Socialists are most likely to form a coalition. Between them they would form a bloc of 241 members, against 180 of all other parties combined. As they stand at present there is little practical difference to keep them apart, and since the Majority Socialists are not strong enough to rule alone, and must take some other group into partnership, the Democrats are most likely to be chosen; the power of the Church is still strong enough to make the Christian People's Party an unlikely coworker for EBERT and SCHEIDEMANN.

The Minority Socialists have only twenty-four members, with four or five mavericks who might join them; the forces of reaction combined have only sixty. The result of the elections seems on the whole eminently satisfactory both for Germany and for a world which must live with Germany and has an interest in getting the Germans back to sanity as soon as possible.

THE SPEAKER'S REMARKS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am much interested in reading in THE TIMES this morning an account of the demand of the Speaker of the House that American soldiers shall be immediately withdrawn from Europe, and I am particularly interested in the manner in which this demand is expressed. If the Speaker has been correctly quoted he said, "Some one also suggests we ought to keep our soldiers there to police Europe. After we licked the Germans for them, surely they ought to police Europe themselves." It is to be hoped that this report of the Speaker's words is inaccurate, for it is inconceivable that any intelligent American—especially one in a position of responsibility—should make such a statement as this.

We did not "lick the Germans" for the Allies. We did not enter the war until the freedom of our country and of the whole world was threatened by the depredations of Germany. When we could no longer stand aside we played our part—a very important part—whole-heartedly and with honor. The conduct of our men was beyond praise. We turned the tide at the critical juncture, because we came fresh to the battle. But we turned it in conjunction with the allied armies, who for three long years, without our help, had held that tide of the German advance and endured the unimaginable hardships of the most awful war the world has known. To acknowledge this casts no shadow of disparagement on the achievements of our own men. We need not doubt that had they served for the full term of the war they would have fought with no less heroism than in their brief and triumphant course.

Great men have always recognized the fine quality of courage. They know that it needs no words from other men. "We cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract." We do them wrong if in their praise we belittle the courage of their comrades in arms. In the hour of our victory, let us not stand shamed by our littleness. There is honor enough for all. And the American will but honor his own the more who keeps in his heart the reverent remembrance of the heroic armies of our allies. We have met war like the passing of a storm. They have endured four years.

A HEALTH INSURANCE LAW.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I notice in Governor Smith's message to the Legislature a strong recommendation for the enactment of a health insurance law and a suggestion that proper provision be made for maternity insurance as well. I believe that every man who has the interest of the State at heart should aid the Governor in his efforts to secure action of this kind from the Legislature, and I am hoping that the metropolitan press will lend its great influence in favor of the Governor's suggestions.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

The Words of an Eminent Man on the "Passion for Regulative Legislation."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Reflecting upon the tendency of the present Administration to extend and magnify the autocratic powers of the Government and to minimize the rights of the citizen, I encountered the following statement of an eminent man which seemed to me so wise that I quote it for the benefit of your readers:

> A passion for regulative legislation seems to have taken possession of the country of late. It came upon it suddenly, much more like an impulse of impatience than like a deliberate purpose. Various abuses have sprung up in the conduct of the business enterprises of the country, and the Government must put an end to them by drastic regulation, is the rough and ready reasoning of the reformers.

What strikes us most about all the regulation and remedial measures adopted is that they are based upon what is for us an entirely new conception of the province alike of law and of government. Governmental control, which we are undertaking so extensively and with so light a heart, sets up not a reign of law, but a reign of discretion and individual judgment on the part of governmental officials in the regulation of the business of stock companies owned by innumerable private individuals and supplying the chief investments of thousands of communities. I can see no radical difference in principle between governmental ownership and governmental regulation of this discretionary kind.

Governmental commissions cannot possibly understand business better than those who conduct it. Their regulative interference with business will only complete the confusion and embarrassments into which we are so rapidly stumbling. The old processes of law are the more difficult, but the more effective. We must discover just what transactions we wish to put an end to; must have once more the reign of law rather than the reign of Government officials.

Applying these words to our railroad problem, we should remember that the great railroads have been managed by men who in most cases have started at the bottom and devoted their lives to mastering the business of running a railroad, while the various commissions which are appointed to control them are too often composed of men appointed for political reasons who bring to their task far less experience and ability. It has often seemed to me that to do this is like appointing a law student to direct the cross-examination of a witness by Joseph H. Choate, or a grocer to superintend a delicate operation by a great surgeon. The analogies are not perfect, but there are elements of resemblance. The wise man whose words I have quoted covered the ground when he said "Governmental commissions cannot possibly understand business better than those who conduct it."

The control of railroads and wires by the Government involves a very serious danger to which he did not allude, perhaps because the Adamson bill had not been passed when he spoke. Now that the brotherhoods of railroad employes have learned their strength, what must happen if when an election approaches they threaten to vote against the party in power unless their wages are raised? Will the governing politicians resist such a demand at the risk of political ruin? Is it not clear that governmental control or ownership will mean the power over votes which can be secured at public expense and which may well decide an election? Is it not also clear that this possibility threatens the business situation in the whole country, since every wage earner will demand the same wages that the Government pays?

But I need not amplify the argument. The words which I have quoted are enough. I need only add that they were uttered by Woodrow Wilson in an address to the Commercial Club of Chicago on March 14, 1908.

INTERNATIONAL CLUBS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As children we Americans were taught that the French were intellectual, artistic, and patriotic, but insincere; that the English were splendid, but insular; the Germans scientific, but boors, &c. Why not now have an "International Club," with clubhouses in the capitals of every country, so that youths of all countries might meet on an equal footing and know one another?

Paris, Dec. 28, 1918. AN AMERICAN.

THE WORLD LEAGUE FOR PEACE

Throughout the world a spirit of unrest
Is borne upon the breeze in every clime;
The old-time ways, the joys we once possessed,
The glory of the elder world sublime,
Achievements of the ages through all time
In dim perspective slow from us recede;
The while the bells of victory still chime
We see the fateful hours fast onward speed,
And issues new and great from them we see proceed!

The deeps of Time and Thought are broken up;
Old empires change; the new are undefined.
What time the world drinks to its dregs the cup
Of bitterness that war brought to mankind,
And sadly seeks new ways to trace or find.
Is it a draught of death? or does it bring
A healing joy—nepenthe for the mind—
Like Winter's frost and cold that herald Spring,
When beauty, bloom, and birds have new awakening?

Who now may tell what changes new impend,
When wisdom fails us, learned from days of yore?
Ah! gladly would we turn to ways that trend
Upward from battlefields, dark-shadowed o'er,
To some clear shining summit, whence the shore
Of a new world and fairer may be seen—
Some Mount of Vision never scaled before,
Whence some Balboa, from that height serene,
May scan new deeps and vast that lave new shores unseen.

O world, war-tortured, now thy mighty heart,
Taught by the wisdom of the centuries,
Longs for an Avatar, the counterpart
Of him of old, the gallant Genoese,
Who dared set sail o'er vast and unknown seas,
Nor furled his sails until new realms he found!
With such a Leader, now forgetting ease,
Though night and tempest still our way surround,
We fain would seek the way unto world-peace profound!

Lo, in our doubt and sad perplexity,
We see a Leader on that summit stand
Who bids us rear for all humanity
A Temple of World Peace, where every land
May yield to it obedience, as one band
Of nations, bound by Brotherhood, and lead the van
Till lasting Peace may come none may withstand!
With hope we turn and glad the future scan
To see arise that Temple of the Rights of Man!

NO NEW TERRITORY

Objections to Acquisitions at This Time by America or England

By THEODORE MARBURG.

IT has been suggested that the United States should use the Peace Conference to secure for itself by purchase the Dutch West Indies.

Is this the proper moment for such a project? As we know, it was because wars had been cheap and profitable to Prussia that Germany was won over to Prussianism. In the interests of future world relations, no nation ought to come out of the present war with a profit. Turning back Alsace-Lorraine to France and Italia Irredenta to Italy are simple acts of justice. Beyond this, there ought to be no territorial acquisition by any nation, whether by right of conquest or by purchase. This would apply to the proposed action on the part of the United States as well as to English acquisition of the German colonies or parts of Asia Minor. The map is a permanent thing and is ever before us. Men would view the enlargement of the British Empire as casting doubt on England's high motive in entering the war. Moreover, either extension of territory or a heavy indemnity would act as an incentive to future generations to embark upon the hazardous enterprise of war.

On Nov. 4 last I cabled Lord Bryce as follows:

Why not international administration for German colonies and Asia Minor? Excellent impression if England voluntarily proclaimed such policy.

In his reply, dated Nov. 21, he says:

I appreciate what you said and rather agree in principle. The difficulty is the League of Nations is not yet in existence and we can't tell when it will be. We in England really don't want any new territory for ourselves but it is hard to resist the demands of our colonies who have been endangered by enemy intrigues. Personally I wish that German East Africa in particular will not be taken by us; and I should be extremely glad to see it placed under international control in the interest of the natives, the United States sharing. Especially should I desire to see the United States undertake to protect Armenia for twenty years till the country can stand upon its feet.

The objection of the British colonies to having Germany as a neighbor would, of course, not apply if the German colonial possessions passed under international rule.

The above considerations apply with equal force to the proposed acquisition of the Dutch West Indies by the United States at this time. Men viewing the map hereafter would overlook the fact that the acquisition was by purchase or would say that pressure was brought on Holland to effect the transaction, and the disinterestedness of our inspiriting conduct in the great war would be questioned.

The prospects of a new world based on adequate international organization and right motive are most promising. On Great Britain and the United States chiefly will rest the burden of inducing other nations in the allied group to abandon overambitious demands at the Peace Conference. The position of these two powers will be undermined if they give any indication of a desire themselves to reap profit from the war.

THE OUTLOOK FOR HUNGARY

New York, Jan. 23, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the Jan. 13 issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES there appeared a short editorial which dealt with the question of the nationalities in Hungary. Since this question, in my opinion, is the key to all of Middle-Europe's peace, and since American public opinion is only informed on one side in this matter, I beg leave to venture a few facts.

First of all, I must point out that to the 15,000,000 souls constituting the Hungarian nation, a nation one in its language and race, the dismembering of its territory on which a fractional part of other nationalities make their abode is not a national, but a most important economic question. And it was this same economic question which made it possible for the German and Austrian military powers to force these 15,000,000 people into this terrible world war.

Hungary is almost entirely an agricultural State, as the entire inner portion of the country is a very fertile and productive level stretch of soil, entirely void of coal, iron and industrial ores. The greater bulk of the racially pure Hungarian people is located on this territory. This agricultural Hungary right up to the quelling of the revolution of 1848 was entirely surrendered to the merciless exploitation of Austrian mercantilism. It was not until 1867 that Hungary started to rid herself of this hopeless economic oppression when the Hapsburg dynasty, menaced by growing Prussian militarism, was forced to yield to the democratic and economic demands of the Hungarian people; and it was the commencement of this new era which gave importance in Hungary's economic life to the territories which today constitute Hungary's "nationality territories."

The Hungarian race itself was never an oppressor, because in its Constitution every nationality is assured rights equal to its own. The trouble in the past was that these rights were misused against the Hungarian nation itself, misused by the Hungarian feudal aristocracy whose interests were identical with those of Austrian commercial capitalism. The land-poor and heavily indebted Hungarian peasant was forced to emigrate the same as the other nationalities. This was what brought up the question of nationalities in Hungary. This, therefore, is purely a material question and not one of historical right. If Hungary loses Fiume, its only harbor and access to the sea, its northern and southern coal and mining districts, its only industrial ore deposit, Transylvania, then the Hungarian people and with it Hungarian labor will be cruelly surrendered to either agricultural poverty or, after an Austrian economic servility, to a Czechoslovak, Jugoslav, and Rumanian domination. This, perhaps after all, cannot be done with these peaceful industrious, and liberal-minded people. And if the European powers permit this, it would be the strongest justification of that notorious lie of the German and Austrian military powers with which they dragged Hungary to the war. The war slogan originating in Berlin and Vienna was that Hungary must fight if she wanted to exist, as the Allies' intention was to dismember her. And Hungary fought.

But Hungary fought not for national supremacy or power, nor was, or is Count Michael Karolyi, the Premier of the New Hungarian People's Republic, moved by the same intent, when he insists upon the territorial integrity of Hungary.

How far-reaching these material interests are is amply shown by the news items from Hungary now appearing in the American papers, namely, that the mere occupation of these territories has stopped the heart-beat of Hungary's economical and industrial life. Lack of coal and iron has closed the factories, railway communication on all lines is completely stopped, and the inability to transport foodstuffs has resulted in a famine in certain parts of the country.

I am forced to believe that any one who says that Hungary was ever inimical to France or England or, above all, to America, is, to say the least, woefully misinformed on the subject of the sentiment of the Hungarian nation. The Hungarian people, in its centuries old struggle against German supremacy, was always seeking the economic and political sympathies of the American, French, and English nations. That Hungary was unsuccessful in this endeavor due to Germany's and Austria's economic and political ambitions, that Kossuth could not achieve this aim during his stay in America, that Count Karolyi's similar efforts during the war were also in vain, have been Hungary's greatest misfortunes.

One of the bitterest days during the war to the Hungarian people was that on which America entered the European conflagration. I am forced to say openly that it was a huge political mistake on both the part of America and England, that they never refuted, or even attempted to weaken, that infamous and scurrilous lie of German and Austrian militarism which forced Hungary into the war. I dare say had either of them done so the end of the war would have come with the sacrificing of less lives and much sooner.

Unfortunately, however, the new born Hungarian people cannot even at this late date obtain any assurance on this vital subject. And it looks very much as though the European Entente Powers are willing to sacrifice Hungary's existence to the surrounding Slav nationalities. I am willing to admit that to France and England the friendly gratitude and sympathy of the great masses of European Slav peoples is a much better political investment than that of the comparatively small numbered and racially isolated Hungarian nation. But I do not believe such political interests can influence the American people in the question of European peace. And Hungary today relies solely on American impartiality and sense of justice. This I believe is not an illusion. And I dare to say that this is why Hungary is without any opposition now, and awaits calmly the decision of the Peace Conference. But I can say in advance that Hungary will never be content with a peace which means the maiming of its entire national existence. And if material desperation forces these people into a defensive war then I really cannot say when there will be peace in Middle Europe.

STRENGTH OF LOYALISTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As I have not seen the letters of Mr. Justice Russell of Nova Scotia, to which Mr. Morgan J. O'Brien refers in a communication published in your Sunday issue of Jan. 19, I should perhaps not venture into the field of discussion. But I cannot, in justice to my reverence for the American past, permit some of Mr. O'Brien's statements to pass unchallenged.

Mr. O'Brien rather patronisingly criticises Justice Russell for thinking Mr. Beckles Willson extravagant in his statement that at the time of the Revolution two-thirds of the entire population of America held loyal to the Crown. Mr. O'Brien supports his opposition to the view of Justice Russell by telling of an event which he declares does not appear in any history of the Revolution. This event is the appearance before a Committee of the British Parliament of Joseph Galloway and Major Gen. James Robertson, and their testimony as to the position of British Sovereignty in America, at a time when the recent Battle of Saratoga projected into Parliament shining evidence of the fact that Sir William Howe was neither reducing nor pacifying the Colonies.

I beg to call to Mr. O'Brien's attention the fact that this examination of witnesses in committee of the whole house does appear in one of the most important and widely read of all histories of the Revolution. In that part of Sir George Otto Trevelyan's work which he calls "George III. and Charles Fox," in Chapter 1, of Volume II., the author gives an account of the procedure on the occasion in question in considerable detail. There was another witness before the House Committee, as the Parliamentary Register for 1779 shows. He was General Charles Grey, an officer who did not speak without knowledge of his subject, and whose first-hand contact with the balance of loyalty and disaffection in North America considerably outweighed in value the ready-made testimony of Galloway and Robertson. General Grey declared that he believed the Colonies to be almost unanimously opposed to the Crown.

Mr. O'Brien might learn of some of Galloway's contemporaries no more partisan than Rivington's New York Gazette, that the former Pennsylvanian was in 1779 enjoying a particularly lucrative friendship with Sir William Howe and had been disowned by even those of his American friends who still hoped, or rather longed for, an honorable reconciliation with England. General Robertson, too, was well-known as a skillful hand at falling into an easy berth, an officer who in a time of war had contrived to surround himself with the comfortable atmosphere of peace and plenty. In his testimony before Parliament, as Mr. O'Brien no doubt has read, General Robertson summarized his reliability as a witness on Colonial affairs by declaring that the King's troops in bush-fighting always had an advantage over the Continentals and that the American terrain presented no obstacles to the swift and heavy transportation of men and supplies. The ghost of Braddock must have trembled as Robertson spoke, and even the living Burgoyne must have smiled to himself. What more natural than that the Ministry should have stressed the testimony of such witnesses? The King's friends were at the crisis of an unpopular war. The King was determined to push the rebellious Colonies relentlessly. Some plausible reason must be found to justify a continued campaign, and the best reason would obviously erect itself upon evidence that the Thirteen States were not supported by a majority of their inhabitants, and were so near to the breaking point that a little added effort would bring them to their knees.

THE OLD DIPLOMACY.

United States' Influence Against Another Congress of Vienna.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The essential thesis of your admirable article in today's TIMES, called "Protection of Civilization," ought to be repeated and elaborated. I am convinced that if it was not for the influence of the United States—looked on by the professional European diplomatist and statesman as a young, inexperienced, idealistic nation—the old devilishness of Metternich and Talleyrand and the Czar of the unholy alliance would have a great part in the Peace Conference. The whole structure of the Congress of Vienna—that curse of the nineteenth century—must be swept away. Some of its poison lingers still, even in the brain of great moderns like General Foch.

Before, however, the value of an article like "Protection of Civilization" can be appreciated, the average American must be better instructed in European history of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. No one can think or talk properly on the present situation who cannot analyse, the causes that made the Congress of Vienna possible.

If the greatest of Americans, Roosevelt, were living the nation could not please him more than by arranging, regardless of expense, for the proper teaching of modern history to our people and their children. Our proud, parochial belief in the little red schoolhouse and the International Sunday School Lesson will not help us to avoid wars of the future, which are already threatening.

There are practical men in this country that ought to be sent, while their knowledge of the "coulisses de l'Europe" is fresh, to every educational centre in the country—Hill, van Dyke, Gerard, Morgenthau, Penfield, Elkus are first among those who ought to be utilized. What we need is not predigested instruction, but frank, uncompromising education in foreign affairs.

THE FUTURE OF SALONIKI.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My attention has been called to a statement in THE TIMES, issue of Jan. 19, made by Charles Upson Clark, on "The Problems of Saloniki," in which he takes occasion to urge, it appears, the reversal of those principles of self-determination advocated by President Wilson when it comes to the people of Greece and their territories.

Professor Clark writes: "Every one realizes that Constantinople offers a difficult problem to the Peace Conference, but few know that Saloniki's fate will be fully as delicate a question, and depends on very complex factors." By this are we to understand that one of the questions to be taken up at Paris is the dismemberment of the present Greek nation? "The disposal" of Saloniki (in which Professor Clark is now interested) finally took place, if I am not mistaken, in the year 1912 when this Greek city passed from the Turks to the Greeks, and might just as well furnish us a topic of discussion as the "disposal" of New York with its hundreds of thousands of foreign born.

There is, however, one statement to which I should seriously like to take exception, and that refers to the paragraph in which Professor Clark (formerly associated, if not still so, with an academy at Rome) speaks, as on other occasions, of the population of Saloniki, in connection with the recent fire and the rebuilding of the city.

By his present figures Professor Clark attempts to show apparently the predominance of the Spanish Jews in the city and that the Government will not allow them to rebuild. The reason is said to be that it wants the population of the city to be Greek. Can it be that Professor Clark is thinking of Saloniki or of some city of the Old Testament?

In view of my having held office as Governor of Saloniki until April, 1918, and of my necessarily first-hand knowledge of the conditions prevailing in the city, will you permit me to take serious exception to this statement, and to correct the false impression such gross inexactitudes are likely to cause?

According to the bread cards which, as Governor, I distributed, the population of Saloniki is 278,000; including 65,000 to 70,000 Spanish Jews, or rather Jews of Portuguese descent, and over 100,000 Greeks, the balance consisting of Turks, Kutso-Vlachs, Armenians, Serbians, Bulgarians and other foreigners.

If Prof. Clark cares to communicate with the chief rabbi of Saloniki, an eminently respectable gentleman with whom I am well acquainted, he will only receive a corroboration of my most positive denial of his statement as reported.

From time immemorial Saloniki has been a Greek city; it was Greek when St. Paul wrote his Greek epistle to the Thessalonians; and, if Turkish oppression sadly reduced its numbers, the Greek population of Saloniki has increased by leaps and bounds—in fact, it has today more than trebled—ever since Turkish rule was abolished. The same phenomenon has been and will be witnessed all over the essentially Greek districts in the Balkans and the Near East.

If Professor Clark had taken the trouble to visit the City Engineer's office at the State House he would have been shown the wonderful plans drawn up by two of the greatest landscape architects in the world, Messrs. Mawson and Ebrard, whom the Greek Government invited for the purpose directly after the great fire. These plans, the completion of which, in view of the magnitude of the task, necessarily would take some time, are about to be put into execution, with the result that Saloniki, rebuilt and beautified, will soon be worthy of her Greek traditions and of her name—"The Queen of the Aegean."

Sinn Fein and the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A little question you allowed me to put a few days ago—"What did Sinn Fein do during the great war?"—has called upon me a number of letters (some, I am afraid, not very polite) from Sinn Feiners, all of which have this in common: that for "Sinn Fein" they substitute "Irish." It was just this incoherence of thought that I wished to prevent. I did not ask, "What have Irishmen done during the war?" Still less, "What have statesmen and heroes, like the two Redmonds, done?" But what did this new party do, which has bitterly attacked the party of the Redmonds—the Nationalists who have fought for Ireland since before most of us were born? The Nationalists did not try to stab the Allies in the back at the most critical period of the war. The Nationalists did not traffic with German submarines. The Nationalists did not try to bribe poor Irish prisoners in Germany to fight for the enemy. Those who did may or may not be worthy of the name of Sinn Fein. They are certainly not worthy of the name of Irishmen.

DR. RATHENAU'S PLEA

The Views of A Leading German Industrialist in Victory and Defeat

By PROFESSOR RICHARD GOTTHEIL.

IN your issue of Monday, Jan. 20, you have reproduced the complete English text of the open letter which has been written to Colonel House by Dr. Walther Rathenau, head of the Allgemeine-Electricitäts-Gesellschaft of Berlin, and which was published in the Vorwärts of Dec. 6 last. You have rendered us a great service in making this epistle available, for it is written by one of the most powerful forces in modern Germany. With its inflated rhetoric it is a fair exemplar of the moral stuff out of which those forces are made—of the mawkish sentimentality and the moral cowardice they have shown whenever they have been called upon to toe the line. It is a whine and a whimper, the like of which would never come from one of the French or the Anglo-Saxon race. And, very properly, Colonel House, (so far as we know,) has made no answer.

"The noblest answer to it all
Was simple silence; let him bawl."

Instead of standing at attention and taking his punishment like a real man, the foremost representative of German industry grovels in the dust and, by a lurid description of what Germany has brought upon herself, attempts to soften the punishment that is the natural consequence of her acts and that is very far below the flagellation she would have inflicted upon the nations she attempted to dominate.

More than this, he cants about "humanity having a common responsibility" and about "every person being responsible for the fate of every (other) person," and "every nation being responsible for the fate of every (other) nation." Why did no one preach these doctrines in Germany between 1914 and 1918—no one in authority? Dr. Rathenau pictures himself as among those who advised against the great adventure and he asserts that soon after its commencement he devoted all his time "to advocating peace, reconciliation and the rejection of the policy of force and annexations." But Rathenau was at the head of one of the most important departments in the German war Government, the "Kriegs-Rohstuff-Abtheilung." I have before me the stenographic and published report of a lecture delivered by him in Berlin before the "Deutsche Gesellschaft 1914," (whatever that is,) on Dec. 20, 1915, and entitled "Deutschlands Rohstoff-Versorgung." This copy was printed in 1917 and is marked as of the "21st-30th thousand." It is true that he was at the head of the "Abtheilung" only for eight months, but his permitting this lecture to be reprinted and sold is evidence sufficient that it represented his opinions, at least down to the year 1917. How these can be reconciled with a policy of "peace and the rejection of a policy of force and annexation" is too subtle for an unsophisticated American to see. In utter calm he speaks in that pamphlet (p. 32) of the forward march of the German arms, and of the subjugation of Belgium and a part of France as evidence of Germany's triumph.

But what is worse, this leader who now speaks the shabby-genteel language of universal responsibility, is very German in his outlook into the future. (p. 46.) All the years of peace that are to come, he says, must be given over to preparing the land economically for the next war; it must store up the basic metals in sufficient quantity, the mercantile life of the country must be made "mobil" and practically turned into a military machine. In fact, he demands that there shall be created a "wirthschaftlicher Generalstab," pari passu with the military one. Not a word about "humanity," about "common responsibility," or about international responsibility!

And, finally, he again utters the untruth that has been so steadily and constantly set adrift by German propaganda: "Germany is innocent; the German people are not guilty." In phrases of unctuous rectitude he seeks to lay the blame upon a "few who wanted the war." He has reached almost up to Houston Stewart Chamberlain, who dared to say and to write: "There is no war party in Germany; that is a London Times lie." Every one who was in Germany in 1914 and every one who has been in touch with German affairs during the ten years prior to 1914 knows the mischievous futility of such statements. Dr. Rathenau and his ilk would occasion more sympathy among their fellow human beings if they would remember the words of the Persian poet Hafiz:

"Come! Hear of those who have felt sorrow's touch,
Their words are few, but what they mean is much."

CAREER OF HENRY J. DUVEEN

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Henry J. Duveen, who died on Jan. 15, 1919, was a remarkable instance of what sheer ability can accomplish in this day. No man ever had a humbler beginning; one of many children in a family of poor circumstances, he started in life at manual labor assisting his father in a blacksmith's shop at Meppel, Holland. While he acquired such education as might be open to a boy in that station, it could not have been very much, so that his attainments were all the more difficult because of his early handicap. But he was blest with an unusual mother who, notwithstanding her moderate means, had an inborn appreciation of fine, artistic things. She was particularly interested in the native pottery of Holland known as Delftware, and from time to time made small additions to her own collection, at the same time educating her two sons, Joseph and Henry, in the artistic appreciation of delft. Joseph was the older boy, and after his mother had brought him to a state where he could stand on his own feet she sent him to England, there to engage in the business of selling delftware, with which she, assisted by his brother Henry, managed to supply him.

After a few months in England, Joseph did so well that he sent for his brother Henry to join him, and then they together conducted a modest business in delftware in England, making such a success that before long they decided to carry their business into America, then a virgin territory, so far as the appreciation of art objects was concerned.

In 1876, Henry Duveen, then but 23 years old, arrived in Boston, having with him a few choice samples of delft. These he managed to sell to Boston architects, and immediately sent to his brother for more. When his stock was replenished he decided to come to New York and in that larger field to endeavor to interest architects in the virtues of his beautiful pottery. He opened a small office on Maiden Lane, and devoted himself most assiduously to this business. With little or no capital he was able to establish quite a trade, and as his brother in England branched out into Chinese porcelains and other fine wares, Henry in turn developed his business in this country. Before long they were engaged in the buying and selling of every kind of rare art object, including furniture, tapestry, and paintings.

Henry Duveen attained the first rank among the world's best judges of all kinds of fine art. No man had a truer eye or sense of appreciation for tapestries of whatsoever period or school of manufacture. Likewise, in antique furniture there was no man better informed or whose taste was more perfect. Henry Duveen seemed to have been naturally endowed with the instinct that led unerringly to the best in every branch of artistic development. In paintings, too, his position as a judge, critic, and connoisseur was of the very highest rank.

As was inevitable, such a man became a part of the building of every great art collection in the country. The famous Garland collection, which his firm purchased upon the death of Mr. Garland, was immediately turned over to the late J. P. Morgan, who at once commissioned Henry Duveen to make such additions to it as in his judgment were fitting, and so this remarkable collection grew until at the time of Mr. Morgan's death it was without parallel in the world. Then again Henry Duveen's firm became the owner of it, and it passed into other collections, principally those of Mr. Frick, J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., and Joseph Widener. Henry Duveen was largely instrumental in the formation of the great Altman collection, having been the lifetime friend and trusted adviser of the late Benjamin Altman, and perhaps nothing in Henry Duveen's life gave him greater satisfaction than to realize that Mr. Altman had built up as fine and rare a private collection as existed anywhere in the world. He was likewise identified with the great collection of the late J. P. Morgan, the late P. A. B. Widener, and with the wonderful collections of Mr. Frick, Mr. Rockefeller, George Gould, Charles P. Taft, and Mrs. Hamilton Rice, and there are scores of other patrons of art not so well known but quite as enthusiastic with whom Henry Duveen came into close touch and whom he assisted in the building up of splendid art collections.

The remarkable feature of Henry Duveen's life was that at his zenith he remained as simple and modest as at the start. This poor, humble lad whose career was the result of his genius for artistic appreciation and his unremitting effort, who became the friend and adviser of the greatest intellectual spirits of his time, never lost his early democracy and never flagged in his enthusiasm for the highest aesthetic standards and the purest examples of artistic beauty.

THE TRUE COLONEL HOUSE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The converse of Charles Lamb's amiable epigram which President Wilson unearthed the other day, to the effect that he could only hate a man if he knew him, is painfully true. We get bored by repetitions of a mere name which means nothing to us, jest with it, and finally conceive a sort of latent dislike to its wearer. In the case of Colonel House this process was not arrested by the publication of a "Life," apparently authorized, in many successive numbers of The Evening Post of New York, since little or no explanation of the subject's "influence" was given, nor any light thrown upon his character, nor any real connection made with a long series of events with the appended assertion that Colonel House "foresaw" this or "was pleased" at that or was "rewarded" by t'other, stated without any real thread of connection acted with the "hero" of any of them. Colonel House told me that the thing was not written according to his wish and that much of it was displeasing.

Now, it happens that the Colonel has become in person and by correspondence rather well known to me. He has a most interesting and stimulating personality. In my youth a residence in Albany gave me some familiarity with that famous publicist, Thurlow Weed. I am writing this to preface an extract from Henry Adams's (unwisely) published "Education" describing Weed's quality, which fits that of Colonel House like a glove:

Thurlow Weed was a complete American "education" in himself. His mind was naturally strong and beautifully balanced; his temper never seemed ruffled; his manners were carefully perfect in the style of benevolent simplicity, the tradition of Benjamin Franklin. He was the model of political management and patient address, but the trait that excited enthusiasm in a "private secretary" was his faculty of irresistibly conquering confidence. The trait that astounded and confounded cynicism was his apparent unselfishness. The effect of power and publicity on all men is the aggravation of self, a sort of tumor that ends by killing the victim's sympathies; a diseased appetite like a passion for drink or perverted tastes; one can scarcely use expressions too strong to describe the violence of egotism it stimulates; and Thurlow Weed was one of the exceptions; a rare immune. He thought, apparently, not of himself, but of the person he was talking with. He held himself naturally in the background.

He was not jealous. He grasped power but not office. He distributed offices by handfuls without caring to take them. He had the instinct of empire; he gave but he did not receive. This rare superiority to the politicians he controlled, a trait that "private secretaries" never met in the politicians themselves, excited Adams's wonder and curiosity, but when he tried to get behind it and so "educate" himself from the stores of Mr. Weed's experience he found the study still more fascinating. Management was an interest with Mr. Weed; an object to be pursued for its own sake as one plays cards, but he appeared to play men as though they were only cards, he seemed incapable of feeling himself one of them. He took them and played them for their face value.

Mr. Adams speaks elsewhere of Weed's gift of humor, which is also one of Colonel House's charms, taking in him the delightful mode of whimsicality.

Soldiers Want Magazines.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For some time there has been a great dearth of so-called "Burleson Magazines" for distribution by the camp libraries operated by the American Library Association. The call for recent magazines is, however, continuous in all the camps, and particularly so here at Camp Upton, where we are receiving so many of the returning overseas men, who have been in many instances completely cut off from their usual supply of American magazines for many months.

If the urgent need for magazines, especially for use in the base hospital libraries, could be brought to the attention of your readers, I feel sure that a new supply of gift magazines would be forthcoming at once.

Placing a one-cent stamp on magazines and dropping them again into the mail will assure their reaching some camp. Any mailed directly to the Camp Upton Library will be gratefully received and promptly put to the best use.

RAILWAY REGULATION.

The Question of Rates as a Matter for the Railway Managers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial on the solution of the railroad problem is most admirable in its answer to many of the nostrums that are now coming forward, some of which are from the most experienced financial and railroad men.

There has been so much said about the railroads that it may clarify our thought if we consider for a moment the history of the growth of our railroads.

Individuals originally formed themselves into railroad corporations, which received grants from the States for the construction and operation of the railroads on given rates of fare. The convenience in the development of our civilization as a result of the railroad promptly followed, and the railroad enterprise developed marvelously for the benefit of all. The power that the railroad managers exercised as the years progressed was often arbitrary and to the great disadvantage of certain places and individuals and to the great advantage of certain other places and individuals. This created privileges which were entirely at variance with our American system. The public arose in its wrath, and created the Interstate Commerce Commission and a commission in each State for the regulation of the railroads.

The public complained hardly ever of the rate charged or character of the service, but of the fact that railroads were so managed that privileges were given to one that were not given to another—rebates, special rates in favor of one individual and one place, as against another under similar conditions. This made one man rich and another, by the arbitrary act of the railroad manager, poor. This condition of privilege which had grown up was the complaint of the public, and not the amount of the rate.

A few years of regulation by Interstate and State Commissions eliminated the system of privilege. The railroads were glad to get rid of it, and gave the regulating bodies loyal support. I think it may be said today that there are no privileges that amount to anything in railroad management. All are in the public view of the commission and such sunlight corrects them. All shippers and communities are relatively treated alike under similar conditions, both as to rate paid, transportation of commodities and passengers and service performed. The action of the commissions in this particular has been wholly good and useful to all concerned.

The Interstate Commerce Commission soon began to develop the idea that they should control the rate and determine what was a reasonable return to the railroads. It was here that we began to get into serious difficulty. American railroad rates (it is only necessary to look at the figures) have had a constant tendency downward. As the railroad art has developed the competitive conditions between railroad managers has led them to supply better and cheaper service as they were able. It is the same commercial problem as has prompted the storekeeper in order to increase his business to sell his commodity at as low a price as possible, having due regard to his necessary profit to continue as a solvent concern. But the Interstate Commerce Commission felt that they could dictate these rates, naming them in their most infinite detail.

This power, which the Interstate Commerce Commission has, and which should have been only exercised as the act of supreme authority, was delegated to inexperienced clerks and examiners. The Sovereign, who should never have been moved except on occasions of high moment, took up and investigated and determined everything as part of its duty of rate equalization and control. It shortened the vision of its duty to the public and the railroads in the mass of detail that it attempted to consider, but which merely confounded its judgment. It is obvious that the commission has failed utterly in this commercial problem of fixing the necessary rate to enable the railroads to prosper and to obtain the needed capital to grow. This policy has slowly strangled the railroads of the country, although the commission has succeeded admirably in the elimination of special privileges and special rates as between shippers and communities under similar conditions.

What is the remedy? We want the commission on the accounting end of the railroad problem, on the issuance of securities probably, on maintaining a parity between shippers and places, but the determination of what rate shall be paid should be taken from them, except in so far that all places and individuals must pay the same under similar conditions. The railroad managers must make the rate, and a body similar to a United States court should be created for the purpose of hearing the complaints of individuals or the public. This court should be entirely apart from the commission. A court's training makes it especially competent to decide conflicting interests and to weigh conflicting opinions. There has been no branch of our system of government better administered than our courts. Do we think this would favor one side or the other? Our experience with our courts is that they have in the main done justice between individuals and between interests.

Let us leave with the commission the determination that all rates under substantially similar conditions between individuals and places shall be the same. The amount of the rate should be left to the railroad manager, subject to review of the court created for the purpose of hearing complaints as to the sufficiency of the rate made by the railroad manager. This court should have no other duties; to the Interstate Commerce Commission should be confined all the administrative duties now exercised by it.

Mesopotamia.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a native of Mesopotamia I cannot let the statement in today's TIMES of Prince Feisal of Hijaz pass without being challenged, hoping you will be as generous in giving space to a Christian from Mesopotamia as you have been to a Mohammedan from Arabia.

The inhabitants of Mesopotamia are not Arabs, but descendants of the old Babylonians and Assyrians. Before they were conquered by the Arabs the natives of the Tigro-Euphrates valley spoke Syriac, a sister dialect of the Assyrian language. Like the people of Syria they are referred to as Arabs simply because Arabic is their vernacular. For this reason Arabia has no more right to rule the land between the two rivers than China or Japan.

Mesopotamia is now in England's hands, and the Mesopotamians are only too glad to have their native land remain under its present owner. To England they have always looked for political deliverance, because they know by what they have seen in India that the rule of the English is just. Let, therefore, all Mesopotamia, upper and lower, remain under the control of its present guardian until such time as the natives are able to govern themselves.

LOWER CALIFORNIA

Access to the Gulf of California Versus the Acquisition of the Peninsula.

By CHARLES HASKINS TOWNSEND,
Formerly in Charge of Fishery Investigations in the Gulf of California.

THE frequently recurring proposition that the United States acquire the Peninsula of Lower California seems to be a dangerous one, in that it would necessarily extend our territory on the Pacific coast further to the southward than it now extends on the Gulf of Mexico. A line drawn across the map of Mexico from the end of the peninsula to the mouth of the Rio Grande would divide into nearly equal parts the territory north of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

The position of Northern Mexico thus deeply inclosed by United States territory would not be conducive to feelings of security in either country with respect to the permanency of the international boundary. If, instead of acquiring Lower California, the United States could acquire the narrow arm of Sonora, extending northwestward between Arizona and the Gulf of California, we would have something more valuable than the arid peninsula—a seaport from which to exploit the fisheries of the gulf. Had access to salt water at this point been secured sixty years ago, when our southwestern boundaries were being established, the Gulf of California would today be an open route between the United States and the west coast of tropical America, while its important fishery resources would have been developed, to the great benefit of that almost fishless section of our country represented by Arizona and the adjacent Southwestern States.

This part of Sonora, about 100 miles long by 50 miles wide and extending to the Colorado River would include more parched and uninhabitable desert than we could really make use of, but it would afford sufficient choice of territory in the matter of railway access to salt water.

The limited extension of United States territory necessary to the establishment of a seaport at the head of the Gulf of California should lead to commercial developments that would be desirable from every point of view. The opening of this almost closed sea should be of advantage to Mexico as well as to the United States, and could be inaugurated by a very slight shifting of the international boundary line in a region still practically unpopulated.

Lower California is essentially a desert region, of little value to the United States except perhaps strategically. In most parts of this great peninsula rain does not fall oftener than once in two or three years; indeed, we were informed at Magdalena Bay that not a drop of rain had fallen in four years. The permanent streams of Lower California may be counted on one's fingers, and only half of these extend to the coast. Agriculture is therefore limited to small oases created by irrigation, and these so rare as to be notable. The raising of stock is little more than sufficient for the supplying of local needs.

The mineral resources of this waterless land have in general resisted attempts at development, water being necessary for mining as well as for agriculture, but there are a few mines of importance near the gulf coast.

The inhabitants of Lower California, with all the characteristics of Mexicans, have ideals more foreign to ours than any of the strange breeds we have imported from Europe. There are thousands of them, and they already occupy all the localities where fresh water is to be had the year round.

The Japan and Magdalena Bay arguments are both worn threadbare. The Americans who want the peninsula are those who have never seen it.

The extension of our territory to the end of the peninsula, eight hundred miles south of the present boundary, would meet with no general approval in this country and would be met with disfavor among other American republics. Mexico should be permitted to live without fear of political encroachment from the north.

It is at the head of the gulf that we should seek a limited extension of territory, and for mutual commercial benefits only. The opening of the gulf to steamship traffic to its extreme northern end could not be otherwise than advantageous to all countries south of our borders. There are no protected harbors at the head of the gulf, but there are anchorage depths for large vessels close to the Sonoran coast at several points to the eastward of the mouth of the Colorado River as far as George's Bay. The Colorado is not navigable, and seagoing vessels cannot even enter its mouth. What may be possible in the way of a breakwater harbor at some point to the eastward remains to be determined.

The wonderful fishery resources of the gulf have been made known chiefly through the investigations of the Fisheries steamer Albatross, in which it was my privilege to participate. During our work excellent food fishes were found at most anchorages and were readily obtained with hand lines and seines.

Several food fishes of the Atlantic occur also in the Gulf of California. Among these may be mentioned Spanish mackerel, chub, mackerel, mullet, jack crevally, and jew-fish, but there are many native fishes of importance. One of these, locally known as "sea bass" and "totuava," is the largest of the weakfishes, reaching a weight of [illegible] pounds, and is a splendid food fish. We found it abundant at the head of the gulf. Specimens taken with heavy gear had to be pulled aboard with the aid of gaffs, three of them weighing [illegible], 82, and 140 pounds, respectively. This fish enters the mouth of the Colorado, where it is sometimes taken by spearing. Another weakfish, called "bluefish" in Southern California, is abundant. The excellent "pez-gallo" is abundant in the upper part of the gulf and reaches a length of four feet. Among the more or less common fishes are barracuda, yellow-tail, and grouper. Mullet of large size are plentiful at the mouth of the Colorado, running up the river as far as there is brackish water.

A few angler yachtsmen from California have found their way into the upper part of the gulf and enjoyed the best of sport with rod and reel.

Oysters, not distinguishable from those of our Atlantic States, are abundant at several points and exist as far north as Georges Bay. Green turtles deposit their eggs in the sands about the mouth of the Colorado, while whales and porpoises may be seen almost daily. La Paz, on the lower gulf, is the centre of a pearl fishery which has been conducted ever since its discovery by the Spaniards. The inexhaustible salt deposit of Carmen Island has been worked commercially for half a century.

The commerce of the gulf has remained undeveloped, simply because the United States has never had access to the head of that great inland sea. Actually nothing more in the way of territory would be needed to accomplish the purpose than a right of way to the gulf and a seaport under United States jurisdiction. Mexico might be persuaded to agree to such an arrangement for the sake of a market for the now unused products of the gulf. American enterprise would secure fishery concessions that would be profitable to both countries.

The northwestern strip of Sonora in question has less water and more cactus and rattlesnakes than Arizona itself, but we can appreciate the feeling of Senator Ashurst who wants to buy it. Imagine Arizona with a seaport, fresh fish by the carload, sea bathing, and busy vessels plying down the gulf!

FINLAND AND THE ALLIES

New York, Jan. 22, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Now that the passions and prejudices awakened by the world war have somewhat cooled, and men's minds are turning hopefully toward the world's Peace Conference in Paris for a solution of the many vexed problems of racial and economic adjustment, it seems opportune to bring the case of Finland once more before the American public in order to set right various misconceptions which have arisen over here in connection with that country.

Ever since the abortive rebellion of the Red Guard, with their Russian Bolshevist allies, against their own constitutionally elected Government, it has been the unremitting aim of its discredited agents and apologists, not only in Europe but in this country, to picture the Red Guard as the representatives of a downtrodden democracy and the White Guard as their more or less ruthless oppressors. Fortunately, however, the world has since then had the fullest possible evidence of what Bolshevism in practice actually means, and the sophistries of its adherents have lost their power to deceive or to cajole.

The Administration itself is probably now willing to admit that its previous treatment of the Finnish question has been somewhat unfortunate, especially during the months of Finland's bitterest need, at the time the youngest republican State in the world was menaced with extinction at the hands of the Red terrorists.

Indeed, the time is fast approaching, if it is not on the very threshold, when the world, and the Entente in particular, (and this includes the United States,) will recognize what a significant obligation it is under to little Finland for having been the first to stem the frightful flood of Bolshevism at the time it was planned by Lenine and Trotsky to make the new republic the first organized Bolshevist State in existence, and a stepping-stone in their designs on the rest of the civilized world.

During the months when a considerable portion of our press was exaggerating the pro-Germanism of the Finnish Government and calumniating the Finnish nation as a whole, it was the consistent aim of the Finland Constitutional League of America, particularly through its organ, the Finland Sentinel, to convince Americans of the fact that, while any pro-German sentiment in that country was sporadic and confined, and was largely aided by blundering on the part of the Allies in allowing Germany to pose as Finland's only active friend, the great mass of the Finnish people was strongly pro-Ally, as would be proved as soon as ever opportunity offered. In a letter to THE TIMES, printed in its issue of May 24, speaking of General Mannerheim, whose sturdy independence and refusal to be a party in no matter how small a measure to the pro-German tendencies of certain members of the Government had caused his temporary retirement from active participation in affairs, I used the following words, the truth of which the latest developments make worthy of quotation:

"As for General Mannerheim * * * he is as true and single-minded a patriot as he has proved himself a remarkable military leader and strategist. In whatever he may see fit to do in the future in connection with the tangled Finnish situation, more power to his elbow! Some day Finns of all classes will be ready to acknowledge, equally with the Swedish-Finlanders and others who now stand by him, the immensity of the debt that the whole of Finland owes him."

As a matter of fact, nothing since the sudden end of the Svinhufvud dictatorship has been more conclusive an evidence of the essential sympathy with the Allied cause, under every discouragement, of the Finnish people, by nature and training as inherently democratic as the Swiss or Norwegians, than the trip of General Mannerheim as Regent of Finland, now happily delivered from the German incubus, to the kindred democracies of France and England. And not only should that illustrious patriot and fighter find, in the warm welcome accorded him by both government and people in these two countries, the assurance of that speedy recognition of Finnish independence which it was his object to secure; but inasmuch as it is to him more than to any other man that the threatening flood of Bolshevism and Red terrorism was dammed before it could destroy even Finland, on its way to submerge Scandinavia and then all Europe, the justification for larger aims of more ambitious scope in which we Americans can certainly wish him godspeed. I have in previous writings in THE TIMES and in the Finland Sentinel constantly urged the wisdom, even the urgency, of Allied action through the medium of a friendly Finland which should lend England, France, and America every facility for effective use of armed forces via Murmansk, to the end that the perils of Bolshevism be most efficiently and swiftly done away with. Now that the latter stands definitely unmasked before the world, is it too much to hope that Finland under Mannerheim may not only, through a complete understanding with America and the Allies, come into her own at last, but become an instrument in the rescue of the world from the unspeakable horrors that unhappy and desolate Petrograd has shown lie in store for mankind under a brutal and degraded oligarchy of proletarians?

HERMAN MONTAGU DONNER,
President Finland Constitutional League of America.

WASHINGTON GAY AFTER WAR WORK

Social Life at the National Capital Takes on New Interest with Prospect of Peace—Some Current Events

WITH the signing of the armistice, Washington put itself on a peace basis quite regardless of international conferences or peace parleys, with the result that, even with a closed White House and no official program of what oldfashioned people call State functions, the national capital is having the gayest Winter of a decade.

Not since the Taft Administration, when everybody danced, from the President and the Speaker of the House to the midshipman from Annapolis and cadet from West Point, home for a brief holiday, has the city been so gay. One diplomat has spoken of "dinner parties rampant." The succession of débutante teas, balls, small dances, and cotillions, undreamed of two months ago, is now endless. Yet, despite an evidence of extravagance in the matter of dress, there is still conservativeness in food, which is one of the lessons the war taught us.

Although dinner parties of forty and fifty covers are so usual as to pass almost unnoticed, and each new candidate for social honors has had her time-honored tea as a début, dinners and teas are marked by a less elaborate display of flowers, food, and favors than before the war.

Few Washingtonians of today are natives of the District of Columbia. Society is constantly recruited from every point of the compass to merge into the gayeties of this Victory Winter. Débutantes who inherit their claim to polite attention through five and six generations of District families and débutantes who never saw the dome of the Capitol or portico of the White House until three months ago are dividing honors amicably, not only with each other but with visiting dignitaries of international importance and with the Vice President, who, in the absence of the Chief Executive, may be regarded as the Chief Personage. There are no political lines in entertaining "The Marshalls," as the Vice President and his wife are called by the great body of the capital's Vanity Fair.

"The Ladies of the Senate," an organization of Senators' wives, continues its war work activities in a modified degree, with Mrs. Philander C. Knox of Pennsylvania and Mrs. Atlee Pomerene of Ohio as the active aids of the Vice President's wife, but there is no doubt that the work is secondary in Washington nowadays. Play is the order of the day. While scores of women are still devoting themselves to canteen work, to classes in reconstruction, and to work among the wounded who are coming into Washington literally by the carloads, these ladies in uniform, either of the motor corps or the refreshment staff, are changing their clothes three times and finding time to participate in the revived diversions of peace time.

Not only has the feminine uniform, except in rare instances, given place to the smart tailored suit and demi-toilet, with fashionable modistes working overtime to fill orders for evening frocks, but jewels that were placed in safe deposit vaults are emerging into the daylight as well as the subdued, waxlight of the well-appointed dinner table. The Russian Ball of ten days ago marked the return of the tiara, the diamond dog collar, and the ropes of pearls that were entirely out of place in wartime. Many of the women guests adopted the Kakoschnik, originally introduced in Washington by Mme. George Bakhmeteff when her husband was the Ambassador of the late Czar. Kakoschniks ranged from a coronet of silver lace copied from some picture of the old régime to nine-inch halos of diamonds and pearls.

While no effort has been made to place Cabinet Day again on the social calendar, the fact that Mrs. Marshall and Mrs. Champ Clark have announced "at homes" for Wednesday afternoons has gone a long way toward re-establishing the custom of official hostesses' receiving visitors without formal invitation. A recent occasion fully representative of Washington on a peace footing was the reception of Mrs. Philander C. Knox and Mrs. Hiram W. Johnson as joint hostesses at the Knox home on K Street. No cards were issued for the reception, but the company could hardly have been more representative of official Washington. Those who came included the Chief Justice of the United States, several Associate Justices, practically the entire Senatorial circle, diplomats, and officers of the army and navy.

A dozen or more daughters of prominent families, having had no intention of quitting school or college if the war continued, suddenly decided to come out this Winter with all the old-time flutter of tea, flowers, and a truly grown-up wardrobe, with gowns for every occasion. The lure of the most joyous play season of a generation could not be resisted.

HOW INDIAN CHIEF HELPED UNCLE SAM

AN American Indian who has probably done more than any other of his race to bring the war to a successful conclusion returned recently to New York, to remain a short time before going back to his home on the Yakama Reservation in Washington. He is Chief Strongheart, son of Chief Running Elk.

Running Elk was scout for General O. O. Howard in the Nez Percés war and aid to Colonel Roosevelt in the Spanish-American war; and Strongheart, when a child, was carried about on the back of the former President. His grandfather was Chief Standing Rock, who took part in "Custer's Last Fight," and who died at the age of 109 years.

Between July and November, 1918, Chief Strongheart visited 216 military posts and camps in this country and interested the soldiers with his talks. He told them of the life of the Indians from cradle to the grave, and had pictured for them the battles the Indians fought. He tried to enlist many times during the war, but was rejected each time because of a wound that he received in his leg. He had been the leader of a band of Indian scouts in the service of the United States in Mexico in 1910, and in an encounter with some of the Mexicans was shot in the leg. Before the wound had been inflicted he succeeded in killing two of the "Greasers," and taking seven prisoners.

Since it was impossible for him to serve his country on the firing line, Chief Strongheart realized that he could, nevertheless, do his bit. He, therefore, toured the land for recruits for the army. After an address in front of the New York Public Library one afternoon, 233 men enlisted. In other parts of this State, and New Jersey and Massachusetts about 200 more joined the colors. Later he traveled from New York to the Western coast, speaking in all the large cities for the Liberty Loan and War Saving Stamp drives. In all his travels he was clothed in his native dress and wore his feathered headdress.

On his return to New York, Chief Strongheart said that there were 18,000 American Indians in the war, and that most of them were used as scouts. He cited an instance where five Indians enabled the Americans to capture 13,000 prisoners. He also said that the Indians were the originators of camouflage, and that the French, realising to what good advantage it had been used in the Indian wars, adopted it. Whenever the Indians went to fight in the war, Strongheart explained, they painted their bodies brown or green and sketched figures of birds over them, so that they blended easily with the scenery.

WHY WOMEN SEEK SIX SPECIAL LAWS

Leaders of Joint Legislative Conference Explain Conditions Which They Think Require New State Legislation

NOW that the women of New York State have equal political rights with men, why do they ask for special laws for the benefit of women?

Why has the Women's Joint Legislative Conference, comprising the six largest women's organizations in the State, undertaken to put through this session of the Legislature at Albany a program of six bills, all for the benefit of women in industry? Why do they ask for an eight-hour day for women only? Why do they ask that women conductors, elevator operators, and office workers (with few exceptions) be not required to work after 10 o'clock at night?

These are questions which the Women's Joint Legislative Conference and its representatives in New York and Albany are being asked, not only by legislators, but by many persons not in touch with the needs of women in industry. Answers to them have just been issued in the form of statements by members of the conference, which includes the Women's Trade Union League, Y. W. C. A., the New York State Suffrage Party, the Consumers' League of the city and State, and the New York League of Women Workers.

"In the first place," according to Miss Mary E. Dreier, Chairman of the Women's Joint Legislative Conference, "equal franchise has not created equal industrial conditions, either in the hours of work or the amount in the pay envelope. Since the women are inadequately organized industrially they have not been able to obtain the better conditions enjoyed by the men, who have obtained them through the power of their labor unions.

"Political equality does not mean industrial equality unless industry is regulated entirely by legislation. Where industrial organization is lacking legislative remedies must be applied.

"The workingmen have achieved the eight-hour day to a great extent, and the fact that women are unorganized and cannot through industrial organization demand the same working day as the men has resulted in their underbidding the men and being forced into unfair competition with men workers. The Eight-hour bill, therefore, aims to remove this unfair competition, and, instead of forcing women out of work and blocking their chances for equal opportunity with the men, will prevent the lowering of standards which the men have achieved and aid the women to obtain equal pay for equal work.

"The working girls themselves want these bills. They have worked under the conditions of no protection and inadequate protection, and they have indorsed this legislation heartily.

"Night work is worse for women than for men because women are the mothers (or the potential mothers) of the race. If she works at night she does not go home to bed, but to prepare the breakfast for her family, get the children off to school and clear up the house, do the washing and ironing or mending for the family. The few hours' sleep that she is able to snatch through the noise and disturbance of the day fail to recoup her strength, and her work as well as her health suffers."

Night work has a moral hazard for young women, as was brought out fully in an investigation made by a member of the conference, Miss Helen McCormick, Assistant District Attorney of Kings County. Miss McCormick investigated the conditions among the women transportation workers and drew up at the request of many women conductors the bill for the protection of women transportation workers.

The employment of women in transportation is a direct outcome of the war. At present there are no limits to hours and women work anywhere from nine to fourteen hours per day. This bill limits their hours to nine consecutive hours per day and provides for one day's rest in seven.

Miss Rose Schneiderman, President of the Women's Trade Union League, comprising 60,000 working women, said: "Working women want these laws. I speak, not only for the organized women workers, but for the working women throughout the State who are as yet unorganized. The benefits of the shorter day come not only to the working men and women themselves, but result in greater industrial efficiency and betterment of the race.

"The last thing that working men or women want is competition between the sexes. What labor has been suffering from is too much competition; women against men and children against women. Such competition lowers standards and injures all alike. The laboring people of this country, as well as of this State, are standing together for equal opportunity for men and women, and for pay to be based not on sex, but on the needs of life for the worker."

One of these bills which the women are sponsoring is for the benefit of both men and women. This is the health insurance bill, introduced by Senator Davenport, to give the sick worker a weekly sum not to exceed $8 per week. For this insurance the worker pays half, and the employer half, the State paying the running expenses. There is a maternity benefit and a death benefit. The cost to the highest paid worker would be not more than 24 cents a week.

The minimum wage bill would create a commission of three, with mandatory powers to inquire into the wages of those trades in which women receive less than a living wage. The office workers' bill was drawn up by the Bookkeepers, Stenographers and Accountants' Union. Its main purpose is to bring these workers under the protection of the health laws of the State, which now affect only workers in factories or mercantile establishments. It also prohibits night work for women office workers, except in professional offices, such as lawyers, doctors, newspaper offices, &c. The elevator bill prohibits girls under 21 from working in this industry, limits the hours to nine per day, prohibits night work, and gives them one day's rest in seven. It also provides for a seat in the elevator.

FOOD AND PREJUDICE.

The Relation Between the Two Tends to Increase Cost of Living.

To a far greater extent than we admit, or possibly are aware of, man is governed by his prejudices. They cost him more than he knows, for a prejudice is an expensive proposition. In no other respect is this weakness so apparent as in the matter of food. During the reign of the Food Administration many people were persuaded or beguiled into eating things they had never eaten before and thought they "didn't like." "I'll try anything—once!" was regarded as a liberal-minded concession to the unfamiliar. Yet our likings are almost universally a matter of habit established by repetition. Few of us have taken kindly to caviare, avocado pears, or even olives, on first acquaintance.

When the use of whale meat was first urged upon the public, people laughed and quoted,

He baited his hook with tigers' tails,
And sat on a rock and fished for whales.

Whale meat is purchasable in Detroit, but where is the steward or chef brave enough to place it on a hotel menu? As a matter of fact, there is nothing in the slightest degree objectionable to eye, nose, or palate in whale steak, as those unprejudiced may quickly learn. It resembles corned beef in appearance, tastes like fresh beef—possibly a little less so, and broiled and served with a sauce, either drawn butter or a lemon sauce, is tasty enough for a second helping, once we have overcome our dread of the untried. That this meat will eventually be recognized as a food adjunct is indicated by two large canneries doing a good business on the Pacific Coast and the concessions granted to the syndicate supplying them.

The flesh of the shark is said to resemble that of the sturgeon—the fish that "goes to the Caesar's dish," but its cannibalistic reputation, firmly fixed in the popular mind, is against it. Man's dread of the gastronomically untried is only equalled by his curiosity, which, after all, gets the better of his fears. Truly, he was a brave man who first swallowed a raw oyster.

Prejudice plays a large part in our food purchases. Take the case of Butter vs. Oleomargarine. Experts in the former have been known to fail in ability to distinguish the two, yet we are willing to pay 20 per cent. more for butter than for the substitute. The prejudice against goods from storage helps bolster the cost of living. Were it not for storage facilities butter and eggs today would be luxuries for the very rich only. The public was recently reliably informed that storage eggs had proved fresher than fresh eggs. The rabbit would furnish food as well as fur if our "don't like" did not stand in the way. As a matter of fact, our "can't eat" and "don't like" are mainly psychological states fixed in habit and prejudice.—Detroit Free Press.

How "Silent Simms" Became a Master of Speech

By MARTIN M. BYRON

"YOU are exasperating beyond words," shot out Mr. Worden.

"Why didn't you keep Mr. Truesdale here? You knew I would be back in ten minutes."

Harry Simms gulped hard, and replied weakly, "I did try to keep him here, Mr. Worden, but he wouldn't stay."

"What? Wouldn't stay even ten minutes? Why, you could have kept him that long without his realizing it. Why didn't you talk to him about the weather, about peace, about the price of potatoes, about anything?"

This wasn't the first calling down I had heard Simms get. He had been with the firm for eight years and had reached the point where he was as much a fixture around the office as the desk or the chairs. He was a slow-going, steady plugger, earning $40 a week. He managed to keep busy in the Sales Department, keeping records of salesmen's reports. No one around the office seemed to notice him. He was so quiet that the only things that would start him talking were such momentous events as the beginning of the war or the end of the war. Even when his baby was born, Harry said only three words—"It's a boy."

It wasn't long before we nicknamed him "Silent Simms."

Yet "Silent Simms" is now our Sales Manager, regarded as one of the most brilliant men in our organization, getting an annual salary that runs close to five figures; and is slated for the vice-presidency!

How all this happened in so short a time makes one of the most remarkable stories of success I have ever heard. But let Harry tell the story as he told it to me when I asked him point-blank what sort of magic he used in transforming himself.

"Well," said Harry, "You remember when Mr. Truesdale came in that day and I could not hold him for ten minutes until the Chief got back? And when the Chief came back and found Truesdale gone, how he bawled me out? That incident marked the turning point of my life. I made up my mind that I was going to live down the nickname of 'Silent Simms' that had fastened itself upon me to a point where I hardly spoke to my wife. I was just afraid. I had almost forgotten how to use my tongue. Perhaps I got that way because every time I opened my mouth I 'put my foot in it.' I was always getting in wrong. I would give instructions and then have to spend twenty minutes trying to explain them. I would dictate a letter and then have to write five more to explain the first one. I would try to explain an idea to the Chief and would get so flustered that I couldn't make myself understood at all. In my social life I became almost a hermit. We never went out because I was like a sphinx among people. I was the best listener you ever saw and the worst talker.

"Well, when the Chief called me down that day it was the 'straw that broke the camel's back.' It was the most humiliating experience I ever went through. I had been with the firm 8 years—was getting $40 a week—and was the office 'football.' I went home that night determined to learn how to talk convincingly, interestingly, and forcibly, so that I could interest people, not only for 10 minutes, but by the hour. No more of the silent stuff for me. I had no more idea of how to do it than I have of how to jump across the ocean, but I knew that I wanted to do it, and I knew that I would never get anywhere until I did do it. It took a shock to make me realize what it was that was holding me down to the grind of detail work, but when I finally realized why I was called 'Silent Simms,' I began to investigate all that had been written on the subject of talking. I did not want to become a public speaker—what I wanted was the ability to talk as a business asset. I bought numberless books on public speaking, but they all taught oratory, and were so complicated that I gave up almost in discouragement. I continued my search, however, and was rewarded a few weeks later by hearing about the work of Dr. Frederick Houk Law of New York University, who was conducting a course in business talking and public speaking.

"You may be sure that I lost no time in attending the lectures. I went after them as eagerly as a hungry wolf goes after food. To my great surprise and pleasure I grasped the idea of being a convincing talker—what I had needed all my life—almost in the first lesson.

"I learned why I was afraid to stand up and talk to others. I learned how to talk to a number of people at the same time. I learned how to make people listen to every word I said. I learned how to say things interestingly, forcibly and convincingly. I learned how to listen while others talked. I learned how to say exactly what I meant. I learned when to be humorous with telling effect, and how to avoid being humorous at the wrong time.

"More important than these vital fundamentals were the actual examples of what things to say and when to say them to meet every condition. I found that there was a knack in making reports to my superiors. I found that there was a right and wrong way to make complaints, to answer complaints, to give estimates, to issue orders, to give opinions, to bring people around to my way of thinking without antagonizing them and about how to ask banks for a loan. Then, of course, there were also lessons on speaking before large audiences, advice on how to find material for talking and speaking, actual rules on how to talk to friends, to servants, and even to children.

"And the whole thing was so simple that in a single evening I learned the principles that turned me into a very dynamo of ambition. I believed that I had at last found the road to Mastery of Speech. I began to apply the principles at once. I began to get things done. I began to put a new kind of ginger into my letters, into my memoranda, into my talks with customers, and with people in the office. In a little three-minute talk with the Chief I nearly floored him with some ideas that had been in my mind for years, but which I had always been afraid to mention. It wasn't long before I was taken off my old desk and put at the city salesman's desk. You know how I made good. Seems almost like a dream now. Then, a short time later, I was given Roger's job on the road, in the hardest territory we have. And when I began to break records then the Chief wired me to come back and gave me Morgan's job as the sales manager when Morgan was put in charge of the Seattle office.

"This great change came over me largely as a result of my having learned how to talk. I imagine there are thousands of others in the same boat in which I found myself and who might become big money-makers if they only learned the principles of being a convincing talker."

When Harry Simms finished, I asked him if I could not have the benefit of Dr. Law's Course, and he told me that only recently Dr. Law had prepared a complete course in printed form which contained exactly the same instructions as he had given in his lectures. I sent for it and found it to be exactly as he stated. After studying the eight simple lessons I began to realize that part of Simms' success was due to real ability to talk. For my own success with the Course has been as great as his. I can never thank Simms enough for telling me about Dr. Law's Course in Business Talking and Public Speaking.

INFLUENZA CHIEF CAUSE OF DEATHS IN HOME CAMPS

During War Period Diseases Took 32,165 Soldiers in This Country and 18,136 Overseas—First Appraisal of Epidemic's Ravages Made by Surgeon General's Department

FROM a death rate of 0.37 out of a thousand in service, mortality from disease in army camps and cantonments in the United States rose to 32.13 a thousand in the last six months' period. This jump upward of 800 per cent is without a parallel in army annals, so far as known, and the explanation of it is—the influenza-pneumonia epidemic. The worldwide scourge, it is estimated, resulted in six million deaths in 1918. Of these about 300,000 were in the United States.

For the first time the high toll which the plague took in our army camps is made known by a report of the Division of Sanitation of the Surgeon's office, covering the half year ending Dec. 27. Conditions of the soldier's environment, the crowded barrack room life, supplied the most favorable circumstances for the spread of the disease. It is not denied that the death rate in the army camps was greater than in the civilian communities, but it is emphatically denied that the army rate was as much larger as comparisons with the figures of civilian communities would indicate, because the army statistics are complete, while it is known that there are many deficiencies in the other statistics.

Certainly the army figures give a new picture of the virulence of the influenza. The medical fraternity itself is just beginning to realize what a sweeping agent of the destruction of human life it has been. It is seen now that there is no parallel in history to this epidemic. Plagues in the past have struck particular sections of the world and caused a higher death rate in spots, but none has gone around the whole world with such violence.

In the six months' period the total number of deaths in the army in this country was 24,058. Of these the total for pneumonia was 21,376 and influenza 1,113, and by far the greater part of these fell in the eight weeks' period when the epidemic was at its height. In the worst week, that ending Oct. 11, the deaths from pneumonia and influenza in all camps and cantonments reached 5,380; deaths from all causes in this period totaled 6,266. This was greater than the total from all causes by disease in the army in this country in the preceding half of 1918, numbering 5,502. In that part of the year, too, pneumonia was still the arch enemy among diseases. Death caused by principal diseases in the first half of 1918 were: Pneumonia, 3,162; meningitis, 567; empyema (congestion of lungs,) 196; tuberculosis, 106; measles, 60, and scarlet fever, 57. In the second half of 1918 the only one of these diseases outside of pneumonia that showed an increase was tuberculosis, which footed up 257 deaths.

This one week of the plague's most destructive period made a record close to two and a half times as great as the total of deaths from disease in the camps in this country in our nine months of war in 1917, which was 2,595. Here, again, pneumonia led, developing this time principally from measles instead of influenza, with an approximate total for the nine months of 820. Measles was second with approximately 800 deaths.

For the entire period of the war the total number of deaths from disease in the army in this country was 32,165, subject to checking up the telegraph reports by official figures. Among the Expeditionary Forces the total deaths from disease was up to a few days ago 18,136, making a grand total of 50,301. This figure is now published for the first time. During the war reports were in rates per thousand in order not to give information to the enemy. Figures on different diseases among our troops on the other side are not yet available, but of the total 32,165 who died of disease in this country approximately 25,360 succumbed to pneumonia.

Weekly telegraph reports to the Surgeon General's office from the camps and cantonments of the country, during the period from Sept. 13 to Nov. 29, show how the plague fairly stormed the army camps, and for the time being made the barracks of this country a much more dangerous place than the front in France. The following figures reveal how the death rate per thousand men rose rapidly to a high point—when death from influenza or its sequel, pneumonia, was taking a toll at the annual rate of 200.4 men per thousand—and as rapidly fell again:

During this period the number of deaths from influenza and pneumonia was approximately 20,000. The death rate is now down to 9, and the number of cases of influenza and pneumonia at the camps and cantonments is about 1,000 among 1,000,000 men all told. There has been no recurrent epidemic in the army camps as there was in the civilian population, owing to the way the army surgeons cambatted the plague. Therefore the heavy army loss is concentrated in a short period as against a long period in the civilian population, and army surgeons say that in a just comparison of losses between the two bodies this fact should be taken into consideration. Owing to the interchanges between the camps they were all struck hardest by the disease at about the same time.

Two main conditions, it is pointed out, made the soldiers in the camps exceptionally susceptible to attack.

First, the soldiers belonged to the age groups which the plague most heavily attacked; that is, persons between the ages of 20 and 40. Later younger persons and the elderly were also victims of the influenza, but in its first appearance the stronger and more vigorous the man the more readily he seemed to succumb.

Second, the great density of population in army camps and the housing conditions. These may be grouped under the one head of crowding, a condition which greatly enhances the danger of infection. In civilian life large numbers occupy single rooms or there are but few in a sleeping room, while at the army camps the number of men sleeping in one room was sometimes as many as 120. The messroom and the contact with one another which the soldiers' duties entailed were active factors in the spread of the disease. In four weeks the malady would run through a camp. The acute period for the country, among the soldiers, was limited within eight weeks.

No lack of facilities or shortage of help were factors in the high rate, it is stated at the Medical Department of the army in Washington. The plague was seen coming, and preparations to combat it with every means known to science were made in advance. A general warning letter, with detailed instructions of the methods to be pursued, was sent out to the camps from the Medical Department. A special personnel, with extra nurses, was organized to fight the disease. Barracks were emptied of well soldiers and filled with hospital beds for the soldiers sick with the influenza when they began coming in at the rate of 8,000 or 10,000 a day, as they did at some of the camps. Each patient spon got 100 square feet of floor space.

The exact total of the death rate per 1,000 men for the six months ending Dec. 27 is 32,152; for pneumonia the figures are 28,558, for influenza, 1,513, so that tha total for these two is 30.071, showing how overwhelming a figure the plague played in the death list. Undoubtedly many soldiers lost their lives because of the crowded conditions under which men live, in the large barrack rooms of the present army plans common to all countries, but the great cost in lives will unquestionably start an agitation among army surgeons for a revision and the introduction of a plan by which fewer men will be placed in a sleeping room.

Dr. Victor G. Heiser, writing for The Journal of the American Medical Association, asks: "In view of the present high rate of infection of respiratory diseases, is it not unreasonable to assume that unless better housing conditions are provided, wherever men live in barracks, a morbidity and mortality approaching that of the army quartered in barracks last Winter will be reached? Is there a military or other emergency that would justify so great a sacrifice of life? It must be remembered that, in addition to the unsanitariness under consideration, a heavy economic loss will be encountered * * *. The high infection from respiratory disease at the present time make it justifiable to require men to live under barrack conditions only in cases of extreme emergency."

In Dr. Heiser's opinion the death rate in the army camps and cantonments, because of the conditions under which the men lived, was from two to three times higher than that in civilian communities. He gives these figures of similar age groups to those of the army in death rate per thousand from influenza and pneumonia: Philadelphia, 8.8; Boston, 7.5; Baltimore, 7.7, and New York, 4.2. Dr. Heiser's article was written before the six months' report of the Surgeon General's office was completed, showing a death rate of 30.071 from influenza and pneumonia alone. As an instance of what crowding will do he points out that the death rate from influenza at the feeble-minded institute at Orient, Ohio, where there was as many as 160 in a room, was 58 in a thousand.

Up to the time the influenza epidemic struck the camps the Health Department of the army was on its way to make a new record for low death rate form disease during wartime. For the year ending Aug. 30 the death rate for all troops in this country was 6.37. In civilian life the death rate between the ages of 20 and 30 is 6.7, showing an advantage for the army on this basis of comparison. In 1898, during the Spanish-American war, the death from disease was 22 a thousand. Then the great cause of death was typhoid fever, which contributed 0.74 of the total. In this war science, profiting by the past, practically eliminated typhoid as a menace. In the Civil War the death rate from disease was much higher.

On account of the influenza-pneumonia epidemic the remarkable record up to Sept. 1 has been knocked to pieces, and for the calendar year the total deaths per thousand rise close to the Spanish war figures. For 1918 the death rate per thousand from disease among the troops in this country was 20.00, subject to correction when the current telegraphic report are checked up by the final official returns. Up to Sept. 1 there had been only one spot on the record from the beginning of the war, and that was the outbreak of measles, scarlet fever and meningitis, followed by pneumonia, soon after the men were assembled in the cantonments in the Fall of 1917. Investigation showed that the camps had not been properly prepared to take care of sick men, exonerating the Medical Department from blame.

For the year ended Aug. 30 the annual death rate from pneumonia among troops in this country per 1,000 men was 4.02. This report covers the mortality in the new army from the beginning of the war, as the recruits were not called to the camps until the Fall.

"Admission for treatment" is the measure of sickness in the camps. The highest rate of admission for treatment for pneumonia at any of the camps for the twelve months ended Aug. 30 was at Camp Pike, 10.23 per thousand; next was Camp Wheeler, with 17.04. Two were used for the lowest record for admission for treatment in this disease, Camp McClellan and Camp Sevier, each having a rate of 1.67 a thousand. In other diseases listed those camps that stood at either the top or the bottom of the list for admission for treatment are given in the following: Dysentery, highest, Camps McClellan, 4.6 per thousand; lowest, Camps Sheridan and Kearny, none; malaria, highest, Camp Beauregard, 29.7; lowest, Camp Custer, .02; venereal, highest, Camp Wadsworth, 248.4; lowest, Camp Grant, 40; measles, highest, Camp Bowie, 227.1; lowest, Camp Hancock, 6.0; meningitis, highest, Camp Jackson, 11.1; lowest, Camp Fremont, 0.6; scarlet fever, highest, Camp Upton; 24.5; lowest, Camp Bowie, 0.4 per thousand.

Camp Sherman has the highest death rate for the six months ending Dec. 27—68.6 per thousand. Others high in the list are: Camp Grant, 39.0; Camp Humphreys, 57.6; Camp Beauregard, 55.0; Camp Dodge, 55.5. Lowest are Camp Shelby, 9.4 per thousand; Camp Lewis, 12.8; Camp Gordon, 15.9. In the number of admissions to the hospitals for treatment for influenza, the most extraordinary figures of the report are shown. At Camp Bowie the influenza made almost a clean sweep in attacking the soldiers there. The admission per thousand for treatment was 980.5. Out of thirty-seven camps eighteen ran above 500 per thousand. Extremely high ones were: Camp Greene, 792.7; Camp MacArthur, 780.0; Camp Devens, 780.3; Camp Humphreys, 744.7. In only eight of the camps was the rate of attack less than one man out of every three.

In other diseases, there was a reduction in the last six months of the year in the number of deaths from meningitis to 0.422 per thousand from 0.719; empyema, from 0.719 to 0.149; septicemia, from 0.087 to 0.064; measles, from 0.059 to 0.021. The dysentery rate remained the same, 0.009. Increases in the last six months' period were: Tuberculosis, to 0.382 from 0.166, and typhoid fever, to 0.051 from 0.022. The lowest death rate for the year was in the week of July 26, 2.1 per thousand.

Two factors of demobilization have increased the sick and death rate among the troops in the United States. One is the arrival of the sick and wounded from the other side; the other is that in discharging men from service only the well are released, the sick being held in camp for medical treatment. The sick and death rate, from disease, for the entire army, when it is compiled in the annual report of the Surgeon General's Office, is therefore expected to show a considerable reduction from the reports that bear only on the troops in the United States.

AMERICANIZATION AND READJUSTMENT

The following letter on Americanization was written recently by Ralph Peters, Federal manager in the United States Railroad Administration, to C. M. Lowes, President of the Flushing (L. I.) United Association:

MY dear Sir: I have your kind favor of the 9th inst., inviting an expression of my views on the subject of "Americanization" and "readjustment to Peace Conditions."

These two vital subjects command more time than I can spare for them, but I have no objection to giving my views as those of a plain business man, in the hope that they may impress themselves upon some of the would-be experts who waste their time in theorizing rather than in practical doings.

Americanization means to convert men and women into first-class citizens, filled with proper regard and respect for our institutions, for our language, our churches, our schools, our courts, our municipal, State and national forms of Government, together with a full appreciation, not only of the rights and privileges of citizenship, but of the obligations and duties of citizenship as guaranteed under the Constitution.

Our gates have been open to all comers, regardless of race or nationality. Time alone has generally been the requirement for citizenship. Consequently we have among us a vast number of citizens who do not know or speak our language, who retain the customs and habits of their old countries, who do not care for our laws and our institutions, who continue to show their prejudices against the laws and institutions of their former homes, and feel that it is necessary to attack our laws and our institutions because of that feeling. There are also citizens who seek only our money, and with it claim freedom of speech, licentiousness rather than liberty, without a single obligation to their new country.

Their children generally become good citizens through the benign influence of the church and the public schools. But more than this must be done if we should hope to make real Americans out of them. Prohibit the use of newspapers and magazines published in foreign languages; prohibit the right to vote until everyone understands and appreciates the privilege of voting; have compulsory education for both the old and the young until there is a full appreciation of what it means to be an American citizen.

When that is done, there should be a poll tax for all naturalized voters. I feel that if they had to pay for the privilege of voting, they would soon be forced into an appreciation of citizenship and a full development of Americanism.

As to the problem of readjustment, our first act should be the repeal of all laws or acts of Congress and of the Legislatures that were passed for war purposes. Let us get back to normal, sane, Constitutional Government. We became a great nation and world power under our Constitution.

Cancel all extraordinary powers of government not now required for war purposes, get our war work stopped and put business back into nomal channels, so that we can conform to the natural law of supply and demand. Let the gas out of the inflated balloon gradually, but let it out. Stop the experts from talking and get busy. There is work for everyone, or soon will be, in all legitimate lines of business.

Every employer appreciates the position of labor, and is prepared to give absolutely fair treatment and good wages for loyal co-operation. The two must pull together with absolute confidence in each other, and if this is done we will soon be prosperous and contented again. Very truly yours,

RALPH PETERS.

"LITTLE GRANDMOTHER" TELLS OF RUSSIA'S PLIGHT

Catherine Breshkovskaya, Just Arrived in This Country, Is Skeptical About Value of Parleys With Russian Factions

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.

MME. CATHERINE BRESHKOVSKAYA, who has spent more than thirty-two of seventy-three years of life in Russian and Siberian prisons, and who is so beloved of her people as to rejoice in the title of the "Grandmother of the Russian Revolution," arrived in Chicago yesterday from the Pacific Coast, thus terminating the first lap of a tour of the principal cities of the United States. "I am going to tell the generous people of the United States," she says, "who at times, I may say, are somewhat selfish in their disinclination to look at things in my unhappy country from the right angle, some of the urgent needs of the Russian population. I am more particularly going to tell the American people about the plight of the 4,000,000 Russian children who have been made orphans as a result of the war, and who, if left to their own devices and without a helping hand, must necessarily become imbued with anarchistic ideas."

Mme. Breshkovskaya is distinctly of the opinion that the Russian people must be left to work out their own salvation without help other than educational and financial from the other nations of the world. Intervention on the part of the military forces of the United States, Great Britain, France, or Japan, she regards as useless. These nations should confine their attention, she thinks, solely to aiding the Russians in establishing a constitutional assembly and a subsequent stable form of government.

Of Lenine and Trotzky Mme. Breshkovskaya would have none. "They have deceived the people," she says, "and their power is now unmistakably on the decline; they have practically run their course. Their overthrow is inevitable. With their removal from power a new and better era for all Russia most certainly will dawn."

SKEPTICAL ABOUT PARLEYS.

In the course of an interview with a staff correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES this afternoon at Hull House, where Mme. Breshkovskaya is the guest of Jane Addams, she, in addition to the remarks above quoted, ventured the opinion that nothing of value would come from President Wilson's proposal to have various representatives of the different Russian factions meet with the Peace Commission in Paris.

"Do you approve of President Wilson's offer to confer with the representatives of the various warring elements in Russia?" Mme. Breshkovskaya was asked.

"Most certainly not," replied the aged woman with emphasis. "For the simple reason that it cannot be done. Nothing will come of the proposition, because it is impossible to harmonize the various Russian factions.

"I pity President Wilson. I am sure his heart is in the right place and that he desires to do what is right by Russia. But can he do so when he is surrounded by influence which may not be over friendly? I do not see that his proposal to have representatives of the different Russian factions meet with the Peace Commission in Paris is going to prove effective in solving the Russian problem. If we cannot get together in Russia, it is not reasonable to suppose that we shall be able to get together through representatives away off in Paris."

"What is the attitude of the Russian masses toward allied help to relieve the present situation, and what is the opinion regarding the existing operations of American and allied armed force in Russia?"

"If the Allies would understand our needs and would stand as sincere brothers by us, it would be well," she replied after some meditation. "But if they come solely to restore the monarchy or to make the capitalists the masters of the country and the people, we would not want their help. But, on the other hand, if the Allies would help us attain a national assembly it would be acceptable.

"At the present time, we are too poor and too disorganized to make much progress in this direction. The peasants are too ignorant to understand the exigencies of the situation, but if left alone and given sufficient time to adjust ourselves to new conditions we would become educated and organize a free and stable form of government.

"But I am afraid," said the snowy-haired woman somewhat wistfully, "that this will not come to pass for many years."

SUSPICIOUS ABOUT OUR TROOPS.

Concerning the presence of American and British troops in Russia, Mme. Breshkovskaya was frankly pessimistic, if not a little suspicious as to the underlying motive.

"I do not think they have been sent to Russia," she said, "so much to restore order in that particular section where they are operating—and incidentally sustaining capital—as to protect and guard the large stores of ammunition and supplies deposited on our coasts by the Allies. I do not think this kind of intervention will be of the slightest use or benefit to the Russian people. The only thing for the Allies to do, if they come in at all, is to assist us in establishing a stable form of government.

"It is a calamity, not alone for Russia but for the world at large, to permit Bolshevism to flourish and expand. If the Allies would map out a comprehensive plan to stamp out Bolshevism and aid us in setting up a stable Government, then the presence of their forces might be useful; at the present time the need for them is not apparent, unless it be to save and protect their supplies and those of the Red Cross.

"The situation in Russia is deplorable. There is no exaggeration in cable dispatches which state that our people are literally starving to death. There is bread in some places, but not in all. There are no means of transportation; the railroads have completely broken down. The people in the cities who have some supplies refuse to sell anything. We have no clothes, no tools, no instruments, no medicines, and little or no food. The stocks in the co-operative stores of the villages are almost totally depleted.

"At the start the Bolsheviki had the people with them. They promised peace, bread, clothes, education—they gave, ah, they gave only money, and that to themselves. We Russians are ashamed to say that, rich as our country is, we are beggars.

"The farmers will not sell to the Bolsheviki, consequently many of the people of Russia are starving. We have no schools, no communication, no transportation, no bread, no peace, no industry. Russia is destroyed. Not even paper have we to print our alphabet. Consequently, education is at a standstill. Even the newspapers have been suppressed, except those of the Bolsheviki. You in America know nothing save what they tell you; the truth is suppressed.

"We literally have nothing that a people needs. But we will fight for our freedom until we get it. The only hope for Russia is the overthrow of the Bolshevist forces and the election of a constitutional assembly."

SOCIALISTS NOT BOLSHEVIKI.

Mme. Breshkovskaya described herself as a Social Revolutionist, and said her party did not expect immediate socialism, realizing no nation is yet ready for it. But its program was three fold—compulsory education, the distribution of the land among the tillers of the soil, and the calling of a National Assembly. The crying need of Russia today, she said, is order, and its 80,000,000 peasants demand it.

"I do not understand," said she, "why you in America call the Socialists Bolsheviki. What for? Bolshevism is not a theory. It is a behavior. If the American Socialists admire the Bolsheviki they do not understand their performances. Perhaps they believe Russia is happy now. It is not. It is very unhappy.

"Bolshevism is a mode of action, while socialism is a science, a theory, a belief. Many persons who embraced the doctrines of the Bolsheviki are turning back—they know they have been deceived.

"Under the Kerensky Government, after I had been in prison for a total period of thirty-two years under the Czars, I walked the streets a free woman. When the Bolsheviki came in I had to be kept hidden to avoid arrest. I had to keep like the mice in cellars.

"But I had been used to that. For more than eight years I was hidden by friends in Moscow and Petrograd. When the Bolsheviki came to arrest me I was taken to a little town on the Volga and then taken through Siberia to Vladivostok, whence I successfully made my way by sea to America.

"Now the people are awakening to the menace of Bolshevism and are preparing for a new and better order of things. In this readjustment valuable aid has been rendered by the Czechoslovaks."

Mme. Breshkovskaya paid a tribute to the work of the Czechoslovaks, whom she termed the only real friends of the Russian people. Stories of violence and atrocities of the Bolsheviki she said were, unfortunately, only too true.

"They have been guilty of unspeakable cruelties," she added, "and the half has never been told."

"So I will address myself to the American people," continued Mme. Breshkovskaya, "and will tell them of our needs and what must be done to insure our reconstruction. Russia is over her head in debt. But the situation is not absolutely hopeless. There are already some places orderly and settled, and sentiment is growing in favor of an orderly form of government. But we have a great need of funds. When I go back to Russia it will be my mission to aid and assist in this reconstruction, and if America will be so generous as to aid us in this matter it will be a real help to us. The Red Cross has done a great and noble work in Russia, but unfortunately much of its supplies still remain at Harbin and at Vladivostok."

4,000,000 WAR ORPHANS.

Mme. Breshkovskaya said one of the objects of her visit to America was to enlist the sympathies of the people of the United States in the 4,000,000 Russian war orphans. Two millions of these she said are what in Russia are termed "round orphans," having lost both father and mother; the others have lost their fathers in the war.

"For the education of these children," she said, "there is a real and pressing need. Unless we keep them off the streets, clothe, feed, and educate them, they will become imbued with Bolshevist and anarchistic ideas and will become a menace not alone to Russia, but also to the civilized world.

"Perhaps you of America are too proud and do not care to know what is going on in my country, but if you allow Russia to remain in state of revolt, with her people uneducated and in dense poverty, the danger will be forced upon you and may come home very close to you. Therefore, it is highly essential that we take care of the 4,000,000 orphans and see that they get a through education. Education will put an end to Bolshevism."

Mme. Breshkovskaya will remain in Chicago until Monday, delivering lectures at the University of Chicago and elsewhere, both in English and in Russian. On Monday she will go to New York and, while in that city, will reside at the University Settlement in Rivington Street. From New York she purposes going to Washington, Boston, and other Eastern cities.

NOVEL CASES IN THE COURTS

A decision of the United States Supreme Court that has caused no little comment is reported in 37 Supreme Court Reporter, 662, under title of Adams vs. Tanner. The majority opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice McReynolds, and holds invalid an initiative law of the State of Washington making it unlawful for any employment agent to accept any remuneration for furnishing employment or information leading thereto. The court says that there is nothing inherently immoral or dangerous to public welfare in the business, and that, while the abuses incident to it may make regulations necessary, they do not justify destruction of the right to carry it on in an upright manner. The law is accordingly held to violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, as unduly restricting liberty to engage in a useful business.

A Health Officer is held not liable in damages in Crayton v. Larrabee, 220 N. Y. 493, 116 N. E. 355, for enforcing a quarantine against a house in the neighborhood of one containing a contagious disease, none of the inmates of which have been exposed to such disease, under a municipal ordinance enacted under statutory authority permitting such quarantine whenever the Health Officer deems necessary, if he acted in good faith and had reasonable cause for his action.

The constitutional provisions against depriving one of liberty without due process of law are held not to apply to an alien enemy, in De Lacey v. United States, 249 Fed. 625.

A city ordinance, which forbids anyone to bathe in a lake lying wholly within the city limits, from which the city's water supply is drawn, but which lake is the private property of persons whose lands border thereon, and the city has acquired no rights to the water of the lake by purchase or eminent domain, is held invalid as being equivalent to depriving persons who own the lake of their property without just compensation or due process of law, in the Florida case of Pounds v. Darling, 77 So. 666.

That one standing on the ground engaged in cranking an automobile in which he intends to resume a journey which had been interrupted by the stopping of the engine, and who is killed when the automobile suddenly started forward, is not within the operation of an insurance policy, providing double indemnity for persons killed while in or on a private conveyance, is held in the Missouri case of Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co., 202 S. W. 1078, L. R. A. 1918 E, 381.

What Are You Doing For Your Body?

Now let us be frank about this thing.

You are the average man. You are ambitious. You want to get ahead. You realize the relation of health and wealth. So far as possible you want to live your life without disease and suffering.

If you are sick you want to get well. If you are well, you want to KEEP well. The question is—"How"?

You will not find good health in a bottle. There is no marvelous elixir of life—no panacea for the ills of humanity. There never was and there never will be. Only the charlatan would say so.

But remember this: The average life can be lengthened five to fifteen years by the application of modern scientific knowledge already at hand.

The State protects the water you drink. Food inspectors safeguard the purity of the food that comes to your table. Traffic rules protect you as you walk along the street. BUT—

What are YOU doing for your body?

No, No! Don't say you "haven't been sick in ten years," or that you "never felt better in your life."

That's fine! But look ahead! Don't squander good health just because you have a temporary surplus. Keep it—conserve it—safeguard it for the years to come. You can save health just as you save money. Some men do neither.

The human machine will stand a tremendous amount of neglect and abuse, perhaps for years. But there is a limit to everything. Like every other machine, the human body requires proper care and regular inspection—to find the parts that are weakening under the strain—to forestall trouble before it gets fairly started. Ignorance breeds disease. Knowledge checks it.

The terrible thing about disease is the insidiousness of it. It seldom gives any warning to the casual observer until far advanced. But from its very first it leaves signs that the trained medical examiner can detect.

You go to the dentist regularly to get your teeth examined "whether they ache or not." Experience has shown the folly of waiting until the pain comes. The human body requires the same sort of periodic going-over. Prevention is better than cure. Within certain definite limits you can decide whether—five years from today—you will be sick or well.

The Life Extension Institute is a tremendously big thing. It is the corner-stone of the great national movement to prolong human life.

Ex-President William Howard Taft, Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale, Charles H. Sabin and the 100 members of the Hygiene Reference Board are wholeheartedly behind it because they see the tremendous good it will do.

The Life Extension Institute works in accordance with the highest ideals of modern medicine. It is not a profit-making organization in the usual sense of the word. Two-thirds of the profits, when there are any profits, are set aside in a trust fund for public health work of a national scope. Ex-President Taft, Prof. Irving Fisher and the 100 members of the Hygiene Reference Board serve absolutely without compensation.

More than 100,000 men and women have been examined by the Institute and have received its reports, instructions and guidance. The Life Extension Institute has a staff of more than 5,000 physicians in all parts of the United States. Its work is national.

Are you living intelligently? Every intelligent human being should be willing to guard against danger when told how to do so and when informed of its approach or presence.

In the work of the Institute we lay down as the first great commandment that, in order to obtain physical efficiency and long life, and all that these things mean to the individual, there must be a through physical examination of the body and of the life of the individual. The only safe course is to take the human body as you would a machine, or an automobile, and go over it thoroughly, then in order to put it in the best possible condition apply the knowledge that science affords, with precision and due regard to the conditions found.

We cannot be too urgent about this matter. It is not our purpose to frighten you unnecessarily. But we do want to emphasize something that down deep in your heart you realize and sometimes think about very seriously.

You know you do not give enough attention to your health, and that some day, unless you learn just where you stand, you will have to pay for this neglect—in time, in money—perhaps in wasted years.

The Life Extension Institute has a Hygiene Reference Board of 100 leading scientific men, including the Surgeon-General of the Army (retired) and Navy, and U. S. Public Health Service; several ex-Presidents of the American Medical Association Commissioners of Public Health, and others interested in the public welfare. A complete list will be furnished on request.

Big business men realize the value of keeping fit. More than one hundred and fifty concerns think so well of the Institute that they have extended the privilege of its annual health service to their vital and important employees. Among these concerns are The Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, Empire Trust Co. of New York, Underwood Typewriter Co., Solvay Process Co., B. T. Babbitt Soap Co., Eaton, Crane & Pike Co., Strathmore Paper Co., Furness, Withy Co. and many other well known concerns. This industrial service consists of standardized physical examinations, laboratory tests, health literature, lectures and bulletins. Over five thousand foreign representatives of the American Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Knights of Columbus and Salvation Army received the Institute's health examination before going overseas.

The Institute's Health Service includes a standardized thorough physical examination, quarterly urinalyses, review of member's personal and family history and daily living habits, detailed reports, hygienic guidance and instructions, monthly health journals, keep-well bulletins and other instructional health literature.

Examinations of subscribers who live in New York and vicinity are made at the main office of the Institute, 25 W. 45th St.—on appointment by telephone or letter—between the hours of 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. Visitors are always welcome at the office of the Institute. Women physicians are available at the main office for women members who prefer them.

SUMMARY OF DAMAGE TO FRANCE IN WAR

Red Cross Report, Officially Approved, Gives Figures of Losses in Farms, Factories, and Forests

A summing up of the material war damage to France is made in a report by George B. Ford, head of the Research Department of the American Red Cross in France, formerly consultant engineer to the City of New York. His report is based on his personal surveys of all the devastated regions, and it has the approval of the French authorities. It is the first document of its kind, and has just been received from the Paris correspondent of The New York Times.

The American Red Cross has not undertaken to repair the war damage. The task is too great for any such method of handling it. It is to be undertaken by the French Government, with such assistance as other Governments may furnish.

By GEORGE B. FORD.

So stupendous is the destruction in the devastated regions in France that one can realize what it means only by traveling in an automobile through village after village and town after town, often where nothing is standing erect more than a few feet above the ground.

The destruction varies. Often where there has been only minor shell fire one finds just the roofs and the windows are gone. Or again, in towns like Vaux and Suippes, one can hardly appreciate that he is passing what was formerly a village so thoroughly churned up are the buildings and the ground.

In general, where there has been a rapid advance or retreat there has been very little destruction. In the great German drive of September, 1914, very little destruction was caused, but at the places where the hardest fighting occurred, at the turning of the battle of the Marne, that is, along by Meaux, Sezanne Vitry-le-François, and Revigny, the destruction is complete, but only for a narrow fringe where the battle was hardest. The same thing is true along the battle fronts in the Somme and The Aisne, where the hardest fighting took place; there is complete destruction extending over a belt rarely more than ten or twelve miles wide.

The other kind of destruction is willful, as on the Somme, the Oise, and the Aisne in the Spring of 1917. The same was true in the retreat of the Fall of 1918. It is interesting to see how the destruction developed. For instance, in September, 1914, at the time of the great German advance and during the battle of the Marne, there was comparatively little destruction in the North and in Champagne. It is only when we get down to the Marne, the Meuse, Meurthe-et-Moselle, and Vosges that any great destruction took place. On the Marne 88 communes were damaged, including a total of 3,500 buildings entirely destroyed and nearly 12,000 partly destroyed, and 40 communes remained on the German side of the lines.

On the Meuse 59 communes were damaged, with about 1,800 buildings completely destroyed and nearly 700 partially destroyed, with 236 communes remaining in the hands of the Germans.

On the Vosges 53 communes were damaged, with a total of 1,256 buildings completely destroyed and nearly 2,000 partly destroyed, with 25 communes remaining in the hands of the Germans.

On the Marne and the Meuse most of the destruction took place during the battle of the Marne along both sides of the lines where the fighting was heaviest. It started in at Meaux and did not get really serious until near Sezanne. Then in the farming villages south of Chalons-sur-Marne and west of Vitry-le-François, running up past Revigny and Bar-le-Duc and Verdun and down to St. Mihiel and Commercy, the destruction by shell fire is intense. This makes a belt about 150 miles long where the destroyed area is anywhere from five to ten miles wide.

Around Nancy there is comparatively little destruction, but north and east of that place the destruction is again serious, almost all by shell fire, including cities like Lunéville, Gerbevillier, (which was systematically burned,) part of Remberviller, St. Dié, &c., down to the border of Alsace, where the buildings, especially in the larger town of Thann, are largely destroyed.

In addition there were various cities behind the lines which were within the range of German guns, and in which quite a little destruction has been caused. This is especially true of Belfort, also of Bar-le-Duc, and to a lesser degree of Nancy.

COMPLETE DESTRUCTION.

The German retreat in March, 1917, along the Somme the Aisne, and the Oise, in the first part of their retreat on the Oise and the Aisne, they only partly destroyed the buildings, usually by burning, so that in most instances the exterior walls and partitions are standing in many buildings and could be repaired by putting on a roof and putting in windows and doors, but east of the line extending from Noyon to Ham and north of a line extending due west from Ham, the Germans had time to burn and blow up almost all of the villages, with the result that destruction was complete.

Today little is left of Hazebrouck, Bethune, Arras, Albert, Compiegne, and Rheims, and severe destruction exists in Amiens, Clermont, Beauvais, Senlis, Epernay, Chalons, Bar-le-Duc, Toul, and Nancy.

During the last four months the Allies have won back from Germany nearly 8,030 square miles of land in France, or an area nearly as large as the States of Delaware, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. This is nearly 3 per cent. of the total area of France, and includes about 2,000 communes, with a total population before the war of around 2,500,000 people.

The German advance in March and May of this year covered a little over 2,300 square miles. The German retreat of March, 1917, covered about 1,550 square miles. This was about 80 miles long, with a maximum depth of about 25 miles. This is about one-half of 1 per cent. of the total area of France, and included about 500 communes, with a total population of about 325,000 people.

Four years ago the total invaded area was more than 15,000 square miles, or something over 5 per cent. of the total area of France, including over 3,500 communes, with a total population over 4,000,000, including the best manufacturing district and the best farming country of France. This area is larger than Maryland and Delaware combined, or as large as Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

The devastated area in France covers approximately 6,000 square miles in all, about 2 per cent. of France, with a total population of nearly 2,000,000 people. This is about equal to the area of Connecticut and Rhode Island.

The area reconquered in Alsace until four months ago equaled about 450 square miles, or about two-fifths the area of Rhode Island. Outside of the half-destroyed town of Thann there was almost no destruction. In all there are about 6,000 square miles in Alsace-Lorraine, with 1,874,014 inhabitants in 1910.

Alsace-Lorraine had over 1,000,000 acres of forest. It produced principally hay and potatoes. It produced 3,538,722 tons of coal, 20,083,238 tons of iron ore, 102,644 tons of potash. The potash deposits are estimated at 2,000,000,000 tons. It made 2,908,230 tons of pig iron and 1,444,953 tons of steel. There were 5,661 textile plants, employing 80,423 persons. These included 1,900,000 cotton spindles.

Belgium has suffered at least two billion dollars' worth of destruction in all and there are two billion in thefts and taxes imposed by Germany. Of this amount $1,150,000,000 is the loss of machinery, tools, and stock, and 150,000 workingmen have been taken into Germany.

Belgium covers about 12,000 square miles, and had 7,423,784 inhabitants before the war. It had nearly 1,500,000 acres of forest. It produced 3,253,067 tons of potatoes, 1,702,535 tons of sugar beet, and oats, rye, and wheat; 22,982,000 tons of coal were mined by 145,670 miners, and 2,301,290 tons of pig iron were made. There were 1,492,258 cotton spindles in use. In 1913 the Government revenue was $160,000,000.

EXTENT OF DESTRUCTION.

On July 24, 1917, the Ministry of Interior prepared a report on the destruction, as closely as it could be determined on the French side of the lines. This report was the successor of a first report which was made at the end of May, 1916. The later report covered 1,223 communes in 11 departments, whereas the earlier report covered 754 communes in 10 departments. In all these communes there have been more less destruction, and this number does not include 450 communes which were still too near the front to make possible a complete survey. The total number of communes freed from the enemy was 490 by the advance of the Spring of 1917, thereby reducing the total number of communes resting in the hands of the Germans from 2,554 to 2,055, all of which are now freed. Most of these communes are strictly agricultural, so that the destruction hits particularly hard the richest farming area of France.

It was reckoned that in the 1,223 communes reported on a year ago the number of buildings damaged was 102,697, as compared with 46,263 in May, 1918, and of these the statistics show that in 1917 50,756 of the buildings were completely destroyed. Of these latter 18,824 were in the Somme district and 12,701 in the Aisne.

The hasty investigation since the signing of the armistice shows that the total destruction in France has been quintupled, with something like 500,000 buildings damaged, and at least 250,000 are completely destroyed.

The average cost of these buildings before the war was nearly $5,000. As the present cost of a building is about two and a half times greater than it was then, we can say that the total destruction in France of the buildings alone is today over six billion dollars, as estimated by the Government engineers, and four billion dollars as estimated by the architects and constructors' associations.

The total cost of repairing and replacing the used or destroyed public works is estimated at about $2,000,000,000, of which $200,000,000 is for the Nord railroad, $150,000,000 for the East, $50,000,000 for the other railroads, $200,000,000 to cover the rebuilding of the canals. The Nord alone has lost 1,731 bridges and 338 stations.

In 1917 there were 527 communes in which over half of the buildings had been completely destroyed. This number has probably reached today something like 1,500 communes in all. In 1917, in 400 communes, over 80 per cent. of the buildings had been damaged, and this proportion probably reaches today over 1,000 communes in all. In the Summer of 1917 they counted over 435 Town Halls destroyed, 600 schools, 472 churches, and 377 other public buildings, and it could be safely said today that there are over 1,200 churches destroyed and over 1,500 schools in all.

In 1917 they counted over 614 industrial plants destroyed, which supported 105,000 persons. It can probably be said today that there are in all over 1,000 plants destroyed, supporting at least 500,000 persons.

On Oct. 25, 1916, a report was made by the Minister of the Interior on the building materials destroyed which would have to be replaced. It was made for 700 communes, or for 41,223 buildings totally or approximately destroyed, and it comprises the destruction of 1,700,000 cubic yards of stone masonry, 600,000 cubic yards of brick masonry, 300,000 tons of lime, &c. The largest part of this destruction was in the Pas-de-Calais and the next larger in the Meurthe et Moselle. It also showed the destruction of 200,000,000 feet of lumber and 33,000 tons of iron and steel, with 91,000,000 roof tiles destroyed and 32,000,000 roofing slates. It can be probably said today that the total destruction would be at least five times the amount given in the above figures.

The total cost of furniture and furnishings today, exclusive of machinery, amounts to at least $2,225,000,000, as estimated by the Government engineers, and over $1,000,000,000, as estimated by the insurance companies.

DAMAGE TO AGRICULTURE.

According to a report made by the Office de Reconstitution Agricole to the Minister of Liberated Regions in May, 1918, it was reckoned that at that time about 8,000 square miles of French land was in the hands of the Germans. About three-quarters of that area is tillable, and a large proportion of the rest is good for hay or pasturage. This is some of the very best and richest agricultural land in Europe. The ten invaded and liberated departments produced in 1913 nearly $400,000,000 worth of crops. The average yield of this land is about 32 bushels of wheat to the acre, and in the Meuse and Meurthe-et-Moselle it drops down to about 17 bushels to the acre. In the Marne this drops down to about 22 bushels to the acre. These regions constitute about 15 per cent. of the total tillable area of France, and the crops constitute about 20 per cent. of the total for France. The agricultural population here is about 807,000, or about 10 per cent. of the working agricultural population of France. It is estimated that 350,000 acres are now rendered uncultivable by the war.

In this region there are about 250,000 farms, of which 110,000 are less than 2½ acres apiece, and about 100,000 between 2½ and 25 acres. About 26,000 are between 25 and 100 acres, and 5,500 farms are over 100 acres. A great many of these farms belong to people who are working in factories, which accounts for there being such a large proportion of small farms. This is reckoned unusual in France. The capital investment in these farms is reckoned at $400,000,000, which would mean $1,600 average per farm. When we remember that the value of farms has more than doubled in France since the beginning of the war, it would mean the total value of these farms today stands near $800,000,000, without counting the value of the buildings.

To get an idea of the number of agricultural implements that would be needed a list was made by the Government engineer in charge which showed that to replace the losses they would need about 51,000 side-hill plows, 32,000 other plows, 56,000 cultivators, 30,000 mowing machines, 115,000 farm wagons, 68,000 harrows, 50,000 rollers, 48,000 hoes, 36,000 seed drills, 13,000 fertilizers, 16,000 beet extractors, 21,000 winnowing machines, 12,000 horse rakes, 32,000 reapers and binders, 58,000 beet cutters, &c.

With regard to the cattle lost, it is hard to get at the exact figures, but in these ten departments in 1913 there were 607,000 horses, whereas in 1915 there were only 243,000, or a loss of 60 per cent. Of cattle of all kinds there was a loss of 850,000, or 55 per cent.; of pigs there was a loss of 380,000, or about 55 per cent.

The loss in wheat amounts to about 1,300,000 acres. The loss in hay amounts to about 850,000 acres.

The total damage to the soil to live stock, to crops, to forests, tools, &c., is estimated at $2,000,000,000.

DAMAGE TO INDUSTRY.

Before the war France used 59,407,000 tons of coal a year, with an addition of 9,166,000 tons in coke equivalent. Of this France produced about 40,844,000 tons and 5,857,000 tons of coke equivalent, the rest coming from abroad. Of this amount 27,389,000 tons of coal came from the Valenciennes basin. In all something over 70 per cent. of the total coal supply of France came from the invaded regions, and very much the best quality of coal at that. About 140,000 men were employed in these mines in the invaded regions, out of 203,208 coal miners for all of France. This means, with their families, three-quarters of a million people were largely dependent on the coal mines. Over $200,000,000 of machinery has probably been destroyed.

Before the war the total production of iron ore in France was about 21,918,000 tons, of which 19,629,000 tons came from the Briey and Longwy basins in the Meurthe-et-Moselle; that is, 90 per cent. of the total, of which 16,500,000 tons were in the hands of the Germans. The miners who were employed in these invaded mines, with their families, represented at least 150,000 people out of employment. It is interesting to note that just before the war the total of iron production of the Germans was 35,947,000 tons. In the United States it was 63,000,000 tons. More than $500,000,000 worth of machinery has been destroyed, including that of steel and iron mills.

Before the war 3,000,000 tons of steel were manufactured in the region invaded by Germany out of 4,686,000 tons for all of France, or nearly 65 per cent. The same percentage holds for cast iron.

The effect of the German invasion on other metals has not been so serious, as most of them come from the interior of France.

The chemical industries have proportionally suffered very little from the invasion.

The textile industry consisted before the war of about 7,530,000 cotton spindles throughout France, of which 4,500,000 were in the region invaded by Germany and of which almost all were either destroyed or carried back into Germany. Out of 2,365,000 wool spindles, 2,000,000 were in the invaded districts. Out of 550,000 linen spindles, 500,000 were in the invaded regions and destroyed or removed. The same is true of looms, of which there were 140,000 in France, and over 81,000 of these were in the invaded districts. Over $120,000,000 worth of machinery has been destroyed.

Of 210 sugar refineries in France, 140 have been destroyed by the Germans. Of 3,000 brush factories, 2,000 have already been destroyed. Over $25,000,000 worth of machinery has been destroyed.

Electric power stations, totaling 350,000 kilowats, have been destroyed with an equipment loss of $30,000,000.

Breweries have lost more than $250,000,000 worth of machinery.

In machine shops $100,000,000 worth of machinery has been destroyed.

In foundries, &c., $60,000,000 worth of machinery is gone.

None of these damages include land or buildings. Furthermore, almost all of this machinery costs three times as much to replace today, so that it can safely be said that $4,000,000,000 worth of machinery will be needed to replace that destroyed or carried away. This includes the stock and raw materials damaged and damage done to the mines.

Before the war France used to manufacture 5,000,000 tons of cement a year. In February, 1918, it was manufacturing only 400,000 tons.

The Service of Forests and Water Supply in the Department of Agriculture estimates that 1,200,000 acres of forest land have been destroyed by the enemy. Over half of this wooded area belongs to the Government or to the communes. There were about 750,000 acres of woodland within the war zone which have not been cared for since the beginning of the war and which have thereby lost a great deal of their value. We can count on the complete loss of at least one-quarter of this latter area or a total loss of nearly 1,500,000 acres. Therefore through the destruction of the Germans and destruction caused by battle, France has lost nearly 10 per cent. of its lumber and 6½ per cent. of its [illegible] wood. The war has destroyed [illegible] 2,000,000,000 board-feet of lumber.

Before the war there were about [illegible] 000 men in the various building trades, of whom about 75,000 were in the [illegible] vaded departments. The total building done throughout France before the war in any one year was less than 7 per cent. of the building that would have to be done to replace what has been destroyed in the invaded departments. Therefore if no building were to be done elsewhere in France after the war and reckoning that 500,000 of the building tradesmen of France would be available to work in the devastated regions, it would take over twenty years to rebuild.

The total damage in the north of France, including buildings, agriculture, industry, furniture, and public works is estimated at 64,500,000,000 francs, or about $13,000,000,000. These were the figures reported by M. Dubois to the Committee on Budget in the Chamber of Deputies, December, 1918. We have checked most of these figures from various official and private sources and believe they are somewhat high.

GOVERNMENTAL RELIEF.

In general, the Government has been giving immediate aid and relief to the returning refugees, clothing them, feeding them, giving them shelter and the necessary utensils and tools; and it has been helping them establish themselves permanently by giving them advances on the eventual indemnities which they will probably receive from the Government, and helping them to construct the necessary buildings. More than $[illegible],000,000 have already been distributed in immediate aid, out of a total credit of

$20,000,000 which was voted in December, 1916.

Up to March 31, 1918, $28,000,000 had been advanced to returning refugees against their eventual indemnity to help them get started in re-establishing themselves. In addition, about $10,000,000 has been advanced against industrial indemnity. In addition, $1,200,000 has been advanced to the farmers to help them start recultivation.

To prepare for eventual reconstruction, the technical service of reconstruction of the Government is organizing a bureau to purchase building material in advance. It is expected that a credit of $60,000,000 will now be voted to this bureau; $20,000,000 of this to be available to house and feed workmen in the devastated regions while they are starting reconstruction. Materials and housing will be allocated from the Government storage yards to co-operative groups of contractors according to priority rules.

On Dec. 13, 1918, there was created in the Ministry of War a special service for supplying and setting up temporary barracks wherever needed for workmen or refugees.

In July, 1918, the Ministry of Liberated Regions asked for bids from private manufacturers on 75,000 articles of furniture, including chairs, tables, cupboards, and wardrobes. At the end of August, 1918, it asked for bids on a lot of standardized doors and windows that could be made up ahead, including 20,000 exterior doors, 42,000 interior doors, 37,000 windows, and 25,000 shutters. Today it is rapidly increasing these orders, especially to the plants that until the signing of the armistice were manufacturing airplane parts.

With regard to the furniture indemnity law about to be voted, which provides for paying damages for furniture loss up to $2,000, the decree was issued by the Ministry of Liberated Regions on Nov. 2, 1918, which allows the individual who has suffered loss of furniture to go out and buy his own furniture with an advance which will be made to him by the State of a sum which must not exceed $200 for the head of the family, and $40 for each other member of the family. If the damaged person prefers, the State will provide him with the furniture out of a stock which it is accumulating.

RE-ESTABLISHING AGRICULTURE.

In the Spring of 1917 1,000,000 acres of land were released, of which at least 500,000 were tillable. During 1917 the tractor service of the Department of Agriculture plowed 80,000 acres, the French Army plowed 12,000 acres, and the British Army plowed about 50,000 acres. At that time the Government owned 800 tractors and had on order 1,500 more. It is probable that it has today over 1,500 tractors available, of which half are for the devastated regions.

During the Summer and Fall of 1917 the Office of Agricultural Reconstitution, through the special mission of the agricultural co-operative societies, founded 120 agricultural co-operatives in as many villages in the Somme, Aisne, and the Pas-de-Calais. These co-operatives include in some cases in their membership nearly all the farmers in the commune. Among them they had nearly 100,000 acres of land under cultivation, with a total membership of nearly 8,000 people. Virtually all of them were wiped out by the German advance in the Spring of 1918. This Fall the mission is trying to reorganize them and to create other co-operatives to stock them with instruments, machines, and cattle, so that they can start operation as units on their return to their native villages. The $20,000,000 which was recently voted for encouraging agriculture is being used in part for the founding of these co-operatives.

INDUSTRIAL RE-ESTABLISHMENT.

To prepare for the enormous need of industrial materials, machinery, and tools, after the war, the Office of Industrial Reconstitution has been organized and has been composed half of officials and half of manufacturers. It has a credit of $50,000,000 to arrange for buying up raw materials, machinery, tools, &c., and it arranges for ceding them to the damaged manufacturers. It is not equipped to buy and sell on a large scale itself, but has intrusted its credit to a private body organized for this purpose. This organization, formed in the first year of the war, is called L'Association Centrale pour la Reprise de l'Activité Industrielle dans les Regions Envahies. It is composed of most of the industrial people in the invaded departments. Its object is to employ every useful means for restoring the machinery and stocks destroyed. However, according to French law, the group cannot trade. It can only be a consulting and plan-forming body; therefore, it created the Comptoir Centrale d'Achats Industriels pour les Regions Envahies.

The latter has a capital of $200,000. It has a council that controls all buying and selling and which authorizes the projects of each of the subcommittees for each kind of industry to buy and sell. Each project must also be approved by the office of Reconstitution, which allocates the necessary funds from its credit. The Comptoir can buy directly for a private owner, or it can constitute general stocks for later use. The recipient can pay for tools or machinery in cash, or he can have the total deducted from his eventual State indemnity. Cash is not given to the manufacturer. This is to save his money by wholesale quantity buying and to prevent the unfortunate effect on the market of a number of little buyers competing against each other.

At the present day these services have effected purchases to the amount of about $12,000,000 and prepared orders for machinery, tools, and raw materials for more than $40,000,000. These orders are especially assigned to the reconstitution of coal mines, of central electric power plants and of their distribution works, of general tools, &c.

Other orders to a total amount of $30,000,000 are now being prepared for textile industries, breweries and sugar-mill breweries, oil, grease, &c. Supplementary credit on new orders is expected in a short while.

The Comptoir can, by its constitution, make no profits; merely its running expenses and 5 per cent. on its actually paid-in private capital.

PRIVATE RECONSTRUCTION.

The leading societies of architects in France have been working since the beginning of the war to make plans for reconstruction. They have a great deal to do with the recent organization in the French Government for handling the work in the invaded departments. They are now organizing co-operative societies among themselves for reconstruction. They organized an exhibition of cheap housing, which took place in the Garden of the Tuileries in the Summer of 1916. In the Fall of 1917, together with the Ministry of Fine Arts, they organized a competition among architects, engineers, sanitarians, and agricultural experts throughout France for the production of better types of farmhouses and town buildings of various sorts, with due reference to the regional types of architecture and regional customs.

The contractors of France have worked with the Government in the creation of its present policy, and many smaller groups have been formed to prepare for reconstruction. The agricultural societies have also taken an active part in preparing for the re-establishment of agriculture. The sanitarian and public health groups have also taken an active part in preparing for the industrial reconstitution of the invaded departments, and in particular the new society called the Association Nationale pour l'Expansion Economique has made full studies of the industrial, commercial, and agricultural needs and has made extensive preparations for after the war.

From the standpoint of town planning, the society created since the war called "La Renaissance des Cités" has already made full studies for the improvement of the plans of Arras, Albert, and other towns. It is now collaborating with the Mayor and Council of Chaumy to hold a big competition for plans for the improvement of the layout of the town.

From the legal side, La Federation National des Association Departmental des Sinistrés, the Judicial Committee of La Renaissance des Cités, the Judicial Committee of the Union Centrale des Comités des Réfugies, and the Comité d'Action pour la Reparation Integral des Dommages de Guerre have all made extensive studies of laws affecting refugees, war indemnities, redistribution of farm land, sanitation, &c. They are all having a strong influence on the legislation now before the French Parliament.

A great many societies and individuals have been doing important relief work in the invaded departments. Their work is now co-ordinated in a special bureau of the Ministry of the Liberated Regions. They have been giving or selling clothing, furniture, cooking utensils, farming instruments, seeds, fertilisers, farm animals, bedding, and food for the returning refugees. The American Red Cross has had a delegate in each of the invaded departments, with several assistants in each department. They worked directly with the French authorities and have distributed large amounts of urgency supplies in these regions.

The Anglo-American Friends Mission has been working in the devastated regions ever since the beginning of the war. Their first work was in the Meuse and the Marne, in the district between Vitry-le-François and Bar-le-Duc. In the Spring and Summer of 1917 they did splendid work in the Aisne and the Somme. They have several workers, men and women, in the field distributing relief of all kinds. Now they are planning a big reconstruction effort southwest of Verdun.

The Smith College Unit did similar relief work in about twenty-five communes around Grecourt in the Somme until driven out last Spring. Some thirty or forty other French, British, or American groups have been doing general or local relief work in the devastated regions. The Minister of Liberated Regions is now distributing the relief work to be done soon among these and other groups.

From the standpoint of repair work the American Red Cross, during 1917, repaired with its own labor about seventy-five buildings in five villages in the Somme, northeast of Nesle, and northwest of Ham, and south of Péronne. The Anglo-American Friends mounted fifty-one demountable barracks in six villages near Ham and at Gruny, near Roye in the Somme, and repaired about thirty and forty buildings in the Marne and the Meuse; during the first three years of the war they repaired several hundred buildings, especially in the town of Sernaise, Pagny, Hellis-le-Maurupt. They are now back at work in the Aisne and the Meuse.

The Californian Mission of Mrs. Crocker and Miss Daisy Polk adopted the village of Vitriment in the Fourth-et-Moselle and have repaired all of the fifty properties in the town. Various French cities have adopted destroyed towns and villages. For example, St. Mihiel has recently been adopted by Nantes, Lyons has adopted St. Quentin and other towns in the devastated regions, and there are many other more or less official cases of such adoption.

The Reconstitution Research Service of the Red Cross has been working with the French Government and with most of the leading French associations and societies to help them to establish a program of after-war reconstitution work, especially to aid the small farmer and workingman.

NATURALIZATION FOR MANY SOLDIERS

THE intensive campaign of the Naturalization Bureau of the Department of Labor in the army during the war has resulted in making 162,864 new American citizens.

This figure covers naturalizations to Jan. 11. More are expected, though, of course, they will not be so numerous, in view of the rapidly proceeding demobilization.

This splendid record has been made possible by the relaxation of the rules governing naturalization in the case of men in uniform. It was felt that when a man joined the American forces he thereby had taken out his first papers, so to speak, and all that remained was to complete the formality of inducting him into American citizenship.

Examiners and judges have been assigned to several camps periodically, and alien soldiers have been naturalized in batches.

MEDAL FOR A FEAT OF FIFTY YEARS AGO

LEANDER HERRON of St. Paul, Neb., has just won a Congressional gold medal for bravery in 1868. That the medal, thus tardily conferred, is awarded only to the bravest, is shown by the fact that, although the law under which medals of this class are awarded was enacted in 1863, only 328 have been issued, Mr. Herron's medal bearing this last number. The story of the incident on which the award was based is told in the Modern Woodman.

Herron, now 70 years old, was a corporal of Company A, Third United States Infantry. With a pistol in each hand, he rode directly through a band of "dog soldier" Indians and rescued a Government wagon train which was under attack.

In 1868 the Indians were more troublesome along the Santa Fé trail than at any other time in the history of that famous highway. Five thousand of the Red Men had banded together for the purpose of running the whites out of the country. Indians from a dozen tribes were in the league. After all the stage lines had been forced out of business, a sort of pony express service was started in Western Kansas. All the riding had to be done at night, and it meant death for any lone white man who fell into the hands of the Indians. Among the thousands of braves on the warpath was a band of so-called "dog soldiers"—Indians who had been drummed out of their own tribes because they were too mean to live with. It was with these depraved savages that Herron had his encounter.

On the night of Sept. 2, 1868, this man with one companion, Trooper Paddy Boyle, was carrying Government dispatches from Fort Dodge to Fort Larned, seventy-five miles to the east. As the men traveled along through the darkness, they suddenly heard the sound of distant firing. Soon they made out the flashes of guns across the plains, and, going nearer, saw that a United States wagon train was being attacked by Indians.

Pausing long enough to load pistols for each hand, the two soldiers, guiding their horses with their knees, rode directly into the fray, yelling and whooping as wildly as any braves in the crowd. They had got through the lines and up to the wagons before the Indians realized what had happened. There were also fewer Red Men to fight because of their passage. The wagon train proved to have only four soldiers with it; all the horses had been killed, and the men were beginning to wonder how long they could keep up their desperate resistance to the Indians.

Before Herron and Boyle had been five minutes at the wagons, the bucks made another vicious charge, which was repulsed with difficulty. Realizing that they could not possibly get away with the horses gone, the soldiers determined that one of them should break through the line under cover of darkness and get to the fort for assistance. Trooper Boyle volunteered for this attempt, shook hands with his companions and started off. Within a few minutes shots and yells convinced the waiting party that Paddy had been killed and that it was up to them to fight to the last.

Ammunition was getting low, as the attacks increased in number and in violence. Moreover, the troopers were suffering sadly from wounds. One of the men had been wounded seven times by arrows and bullets. Another had been hit on the head by a tomahawk during a hand-to-hand encounter. The third man had been wounded twice, and the fourth had a bullet through his arm. Only Herron himself was uninjured. They talked the prospect over and decided that each man, as he reached his last cartridge, should shoot himself, so that the Indians might not torture him. Finally but twelve rounds of ammunition were left. The Indians were apparently preparing for another charge.

Another band of what the troopers thought to be Indians, dressed in white, came up as dawn broke, and the beleaguered men realised that to beat off both bands was a hopeless task. The rest of the story is told in Herron's own words:

"Before we could fire, we heard a call in English: 'Don't fire!' Then the man threw his carbine up in the air and yelled. To our delight we recognized Paddy Boyle. He had got through the lines all right and had reached the fort. The savages had now broken and were fleeing across the prairie.

"'What kind of a uniform do you call this?' I asked Paddy.

"'Well, the boys were asleep when I reached the fort,' he answered. 'They didn't take time to dress. They haven't got anything on but their underclothes.'

It was a fact. The band of troopers had almost literally jumped from their beds to their horses' backs when the call came from their brothers in distress.

ROOSEVELT CARTOON

"INTO A FAR COUNTRY" By STUART MORRIS

Artist's Proof.

So numerous have been requests from all parts of the country for prints in permanent form of the remarkable Roosevelt cartoon, "Into a Far Country," by Stuart Morris, which appeared in the SEATTLE POST-INTELLIGENCER on the occasion of the death of the former president, that arrangements have been made to print a limited number of proofs on India tint paper from a process plate.

Those who wish to obtain a reproduction of this very unusual drawing may do so by addressing Art Department, THE POST-INTELLIGENCER, SEATTLE, WASH., and inclosing 25 cents (stamps or coin) for each copy. The small charge is made necessary to cover the cost of printing and mailing.

In addition to the prints on India cameo paper, there will be a limited edition from an intaglio engraving on Japanese Kochi, faced by a tip-on print of the charcoal portrait of Col. Roosevelt, also by Mr. Morris. The artist's proofs of the cartoon and the portrait from the copper plates are tastefully arranged in a folio. These artistic folios, which, if desired, will be sent on approval to responsible parties, will be sold for $5 each (money order or personal check).

These Durable Soles Cut Shoe Bills Down

"For use around cement plants and similar places where rough materials grind down soles quickly, I recommend Neolin Soles. They resist wear surprisingly. After working around the clinker department long enough to wear out two pairs of ordinary soles, my Neolin Soles are still as good as new," writes A. F. Miller, superintendent of The Peninsular Portland Cement Company plant in Jackson, Michigan.

It is remarkable how tough and durable Neolin Soles are. They are made so by Science—comfortable and waterproof, too. They come on new shoes in many styles for men, women, and children, and are available everywhere for re-soling. Wear them, and cut your shoe bills down.

Hair Often Ruined By Washing With Soap

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Many soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

One of the best things for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than some expensive soaps or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

TWO VIEWS OF WHAT GERMANY SHOULD PAY

Shall Allies Attempt to Exact Full Reparation for Damages Done in War and Its Cost to Them?

Germany and the nations associated with her having been brought to their knees, the question arises, "How much shall they pay?" Around the green baize the monetary reparation will soon be discussed. Meanwhile many widely divergent views are current of the sums which should be levied upon the Central Powers, for in the estimates there must be considered the share which Austria-Hungary, Turkey, and Bulgaria should pay. Two views of the problem are herewith presented. Charles Stewart Davison, Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the American Defense Society, says in an interview that he would impose no limit. A more moderate position is held by Franz Sigel, a son of General Franz Sigel, who led the republican forces in Baden when Germany seventy years ago tried to fling off the yoke of the Hohenzollern and later fought for the Federal side in the civil war here.

BY FRANZ SIGEL,
President of the Friends of German Democracy.

GERMANY'S guilt is established and she awaits sentence. What shall be the terms imposed?

There can be no compensation that will replace the loss of ten millions of lives, the maiming of twenty millions, the devastation of thousands of square miles of occupied territory in Belgium and France, and the lawlessness of a policy of frightfulness that offended the common decency of mankind. The dead cannot be recalled to life and the maimed cannot be made whole.

He who can find no reason for the ultimate regeneration of Germany will say: Charge Germany with the whole cost of the war; she started it, let her pay the bill whatever the amount. If she goes under, well and good, she deserved no better fate.

But is this the course of wisdom from the point of view that sees facts as they are, looks into the future and tries to fathom what in the end will be best for America, best for the world? History has shown that neither Germany nor the Germans can be exterminated. Armenius slaughtered the legions of Varus and Napoleon was defeated at Leipsic. A nation of seventy millions cannot be wiped out. Poland has survived more than one partition and is to enter the ranks of nations again. The Armenians survive centuries of Turkish cruelty.

The statesmen who are guiding the world today see no gain in a policy of extermination. They are ready to treat even with a Bolshevist Russia in the hope of causing the rehabilitation of Russia. The very policy of the creation of a League of Nations that shall be a guarantee of lasting peace must be based on the principle of eliminating the causes of war.

The question, then, is not what Germany should pay, but what can she pay and survive for ultimate redemption?

The pre-war wealth of Germany of some eighty billions of dollars cannot be taken as a basis. Germany was then at the height of her commercial prosperity; she owned a merchant fleet second only to that of England, with whom she shared the carrying trade of the world; her industrial machinery was kept at a maximum of efficiency; she was able to produce rapidly and cheaply what the foreign market demanded. She constantly found new markets and drew on the wealth of her colonies in Africa and the Far East.

And today? Her foreign trade, the ships to carry it, are gone; for four year she has been cut off from supplies of needed raw materials like cotton, hides, and rubber; her industrial energy has been largely abbsorbed in the manufacture of mere makeshift substitutes; her industrial machinery has deteriorated because she lacked the supplies necessary for replacement and upkeep; she has lost her colonies and will lose Alsace and Lorraine with the iron mines of the Minette region; probably much of East Prussia with possibly the port of Danzig will be given the new Poland. Her losses in killed and permanently crippled are not less than a tenth of her man power. Add the economic loss incident to political upheaval during a period of radical political change—and it is clear that Germany's national wealth has shrunk much since 1914.

This is no cause for pity; a people must bear the suffering following wrongs committed by them in the name of their Government. The German Imperial Government became a criminal Government.

IMPOSSIBLE TO PAY.

Then how is it possible for a nation whose resources are crippled to meet the imposition of an indemnity of $150,000,000,000—an amount more than double its total present national wealth? Of course it is not possible.

But the Imperial German Government has been overthrown; it no longer exists. In its place the German people are at work establishing a representative Government responsible to the people, really democratic in principle and aims. The most hopeful augury for the future are the elections just held; these were no mere form but a real expression of the popular will. Both men and women voted; the minimum age was 20, not 21; it was estimated that thirty to forty millions were of voting age, and the returns of the actual vote indicate that fifteen to twenty million votes were cast—about as many as are cast in a Presidential election in this country.

The National Assembly that is to meet on Feb. 5 at Weimar is representative, and acts under a mandate of the people. The forecasts of the Constitution that is to come out of its deliberations all indicate that it will result in a democratic German republic, resting on a sound and lasting Constitution.

With a united voice the nation has acclaimed the President's statement—an American statement—that "the world must be made safe for democracy." What better way is there of helping to make the world safe for democracy than by making a democracy of a country of seventy millions?

Are we to deal with the new Germany of Federated Republics in the same spirit in which we would have dealt with an Imperial Germany of autocratic dynastic interests?

The people are the same, but the system they have adopted by a real vote is a system every American must seek to encourage. It is surely to the political and economic interest of America and the world at large to see a German republic established on a firm basis.

This is not from the standpoint of what is best for Germany, not at all. What is good for Germany is a mere incident of what is good for the new world of nations of the future.

Is not less money compensation from a stable German republic in the final analysis a better return for the world than more money from a German autocracy?

If any fact has been proved during the last four years it is the tremendous power of spiritual forces. In the end they have overpowered and overcome mere material forces. So spiritual gain will outweigh mere monetary gains.

Would not the attitude of the Peace Council toward a Bolshevist Russia speaking with a real mandate of the people be different than its attitude toward the Bolshevist Russia based on force?

So today we are not dealing with the same Germany that we dealt with before November, 1918. In a very real sense it is another, a different Germany even its boundaries will be different. A change in the factors of the problem requires a change in the result.

The self interest of civilization requires that such action be taken as will prevent the creation of a festering sore on the body politic to sap and weaken the new structure reared under the aegis of a League of Nations. The policy of this league must be one of ultimate inclusion, not permanent exclusion.

FEARS GROWTH OF HATE.

The germ of hatred and revenge must not be implanted in a democratic Germany of the future, to grow and propagate. Today the extreme radical has failed there; but will he fail in a disheartened and hopeless Germany laboring under a burden of taxes from which there is no ultimate escape for generations? We are now meeting a threat of a Bolshevism recruited from the hopeless and the discontented forces in a Russia of almost two hundred millions. Its class appeal finds a response from the discontented in every nation. It knows no national boundaries. Democracy has conquered autocracy, but it must now restrain and overthrow Bolshevism. We must prevent its spread by saving a nation of 70,000,000 from the conditions that breed it.

Now, shall the German Republic be burdened with an indemnity calculated on the total cost of the war and on punitive damages of $100,000,000,000 or $150,000,000,000? Wise and farseeing statesmanship will say 'No.' The total wealth of the German nation is not sufficient to meet such a demand by half. It would impose a condition of hopelessness and discontent and breed revolt. The world would create an international condition that would rally the forces of discontent around the banner of revenge. A national Alsace-Lorraine problem would be succeeded by an international German problem, in which the desire for revenge would be paramount. This would breed a new world war in time.

How much should Germany be required to pay? Statisticians must find the exact amount. Excluded should be such items as are incident to the ordinary expense and wastage of war—the cost of maintenance of armed forces, loss through the divergence of commerce and industry from peace channels. Belligerents must find compensation for this in the ultimate spiritual gain for the world—the elimination of an antiquated autocratic system of government and the substitution, for a balance of power based on might and expediency, of a League of Nations founded on right and justice.

But Germany should make reparation for every loss incident to and flowing from the deliberate policy of lawlessness that saw in treaties "a scrap of paper" which could not prevent the invasion of Belgium; that reverted to barbarism and cast aside all moral values to gain material success, that condoned the destruction of noncombatants at sea in ruthless U-boat warfare, that bombarded towns and villages from the air and killed innocent noncombatants, women, and children; that sunk hospital ships and drowned survivors of U-boat attacks.

Even a German people struggling honestly and sincerely to establish democracy must share responsibility for these acts. But the new Germany must not be crushed nor remote generations overburdened. Unborn generations should not directly pay for the sins of the fathers.

But there is a price the German people must pay in addition to any indemnity. They must pay a spiritual indemnity, the penalty of loss of national decency and of the contempt of the world; they must live through a time of probation and be judged by their acts. Their fate lies in their own hands. They must prove the honesty of their purpose to reform. If by a real penitence they show that they are on the road to redemption, the world will surely grant them the boon of tolerance. But if they fall and revert to the unholy national immorality and unmorality of the past forty years, then let the nation be visited with the punishment of eventual extinction from the face of the earth.

PAYMENT IN FULL.

Charles Stewart Davison of the American Defense Society made an unqualified reply when asked what damages should be demanded of Germany.

"She should pay for all the damage she has caused," he said.

"There is confusion in the public mind on this question, a confusion which is due to German propaganda. Why mix the question as to what Germany ought to pay with what she can pay? The court in fixing the damage does not inquire as to the present ability of the defendant to pay. That is a matter for the Sheriff. The question as to how much Germany should pay is one of justice. After the amount has been decided, the Sheriff comes in and finds out whether or not she can pay, how long it may take to do it, and in what amounts the payments shall be made.

"This is no time for Germany to raise the issue that she may be asked to pay too much. She must make reparation for all the woe and havoc she brought upon the world. What difference does the amount make at this stage? The sum of the damages can only be determined when all the nations bring in their bills.

"The question whether Germany should pay for all the costs of the war to the Allies can soon be determined. What did she do when she brought France to the dust in 1870? Did she not levy upon France an indemnity which was admitted at the time to be equal to the money which Germany had spent in subjugating the French? There was no question then as to whether or not the people of France could pay what was in those days an enormous sum.

"When the war of 1870 was over it developed that Germany had deliberately provoked France to war, and was in every sense the aggressor. Justly, then, at this time, does France demand back that indemnity with all the interest for nearly fifty years. France did pay and paid far more quickly than was believed possible.

"The matter of how much Germany shall pay having been established, it makes little difference how long a time is required for her to do it. Let it be 1,000 years or 10,000, just so long as she learns that lesson, that wars of aggression must cease."

Mr. Davison was asked whether the cost of collecting the damages from Germany through a long period of years would not reach a large sum.

"Again the Sheriff," was his reply. "The fees of the Sheriff must be paid by the party against whom the execution has been levied. Whatever it costs to maintain armies in Germany to guarantee that the nation shall pay for the damages she has inflicted, must be paid from the sums collected from Germany. The costs of maintaining armies of occupation are even now being met by Germany."

Mr. Davison said that there was no special reason for the powers to concern themselves about future trade with Germany, for the Germans would be well able to care for themselves. He thought that so far as the world was concerned it could get along without the Germans.

"Why should we fear?" he asked. "Germany hurried to make peace as soon as there was any chance that her own lands might be devastated, her own population harried, her own factories destroyed. Brutality and cowardice have walked hand in hand in Germany's procedure. You cannot cure a brute if you allow him actually to profit by his brutality. It is said that Germany will be sullen, if she is punished, and that therefore she should be forgiven that she may be cheerful. Well, if that be so, if justice be construed by Germany as punishment and she therefore becomes sullen, it will be but an evidence that we would better deal with a sullen Germany than with an arrogant one.

"Germany to the end of time will be either arrogant or cringing. Her people are of a nature which construes courtesy as concession.

"When law fails of enforcement from supineness, subservience or corruption on the part of those called upon to administer it, and justice fails to be done, the social fabric disintegrates. Punishment for national crime has only failed of enforcement to the extent to which power has been lacking. If Germany escapes making reparation in any one direction or in several or many directions, in the present instance, it will be from lack of power on the part of the Allies. Such lack of power will necessarily arise from a weak and mushy sentimentality which fails to recognize that in forgiving the foe we are forgiving them for offenses committed against others. In other words, we are being generous with the property of others.

ESTIMATES OF DAMAGE.

The cost to the Allies of carrying on the war against Germany has been estimated by Lloyd George at from $120,000,000,000 to $150,000,000,000. This is largely guesswork, but the estimate prepared by the statistician of the Metals National Bank of New York may be accepted as an index. It is as follows:

Great Britain	$41,500,000,000
United States	18,000,000,000
France	26,800,000,000
Russia	21,500,000,000
Italy	8,507,000,000
Belgium	7,100,000,000
	$123,407,000,000

The cost of rehabilitating the devastated portions of France has been estimated at $6,219,068,300 and the restoration of the buildings and factories of ravaged Belgium has been placed at $3,042,859,700, making a total of more than $9,000,000,000. The material damages sustained by Great Britain have been reckoned at $7,500,000,000. Enormous sums have been charged against Germany for her acts of piracy upon the commerce of the world.

The total wealth of Austria-Hungary has been placed at $55,000,000,000, and the combined wealth of Turkey and of Bulgaria at $4,000,000,000. All the assets of Germany and her associates would barely suffice to reimburse the Allies for the cost of the war.

Germany's national debt now amounts, in round figures, to $29,000,000,000; that of Austria, $15,422,000,000; and that of Hungary, $6,316,000,000. The interest on this at 4 per cent. is a staggering obligation in itself. The paying of the interest on the war bonds and the paying of the actual damages wrought by the armies of the Kaiser will, therefore, be a tremendous task.

PRACTICAL HELPS FOR NEW NATIONS

DR. THOMAS G. MASARYK, first President of the new Czecho-slovak State, interested many internationally minded citizens here in the future, not only of his own State, but of all the newly emancipated peoples that are struggling toward a democratic organization of their national life. He urged them to organize an American association to help the liberated peoples of mid-Europe in their spiritual and material development, and to inform Americans of the life, ideals, and needs of these peoples; and as a result, there has been formed the American Mid-European Association, with the following men in its Board of Directors:

George F. Peabody,
William H. Childs,

It was recognized that these new nations which had been born as a result of the great war were in a lamentable condition, some of them economically ruined, all of them industrially crippled. What was needed first of all was material reconstruction.

The Chairman of the association, R. J. Caldwell, who is a cotton factor, set to work to interest commercial and financial concerns in this rehabilitation. As a result of his efforts one large commercial organization has arranged to take and sell all the Bohemian glass that can be shipped to this country from Bohemia. Another large commission house has agreed to place its numerous agencies throughout the United States and Western Europe at the disposal of the Governments of the new States at a much reduced commission, in order to stimulate their industries. The National City Bank is now engaged in a survey looking to the establishment of branch banks in those large cities where conditions are sufficiently stable to justify the belief in a growth of industry that will require adequate banking facilities and loans of money. The Foreign Trade Bureau of the Merchants' Association of New York City has held conferences with commercial commissions from some of the new States in order to secure the information necessary to undertake the right kind of action. Several large corporations have sent experts to those new States to report upon the possibilities of investment and concessions. Altogether, a good beginning has been made looking to the rendering of material assistance by Americans to the peoples of the new States.

But helpful relations can be established between the peoples of those countries and the people of the United States only when they really understand one another and have learned to sympathize with one another. This means a vigorous and constant educational campaign. Already two well-selected libraries of books descriptive of America, its life, ideals, culture, education, history, and literature have been placed in two of the universities of those new States, and similar action is contemplated in others. Investigation is now being made to discover the number of scholarships and fellowships available in American colleges and universities wherewith to invite students from those countries to study here and bring back with them to their own countries a true knowledge of what America stands for. Similarly, it is known that in every American university there are a few students specializing in the study of these countries which have recently been emancipated, and efforts are being made to secure fellowships for them to finish their studies in these countries.

Moreover, efforts are being made with a considerable degree of success to influence the large publishing houses to take advantage of the interest aroused in these new people to publish books descriptive of their life, culture, and resources. This is necessary not only to enable the intelligent American public to become familiar with the institutions and modes of living of these peoples, but to prepare the way for visits to them. The tourists' agencies have already approached looking to the organization of travel groups of teachers, ministers, and social workers in the Summer vacations when these countries will have become more settled. The representatives of some of these countries in the United States are enthusiastic about the results that may accrue from this exchange of visitors. Americans who have been in these countries and familiarized themselves with the life, art, resources, and ideals of these people cannot fail to supply American newspapers and magazines with descriptive matter concerning them, but can become the agents of friendly and sympathetic relations by organizing lecture courses that can be given in forums, women's clubs, churches, and schools. Already arrangements have been made with a considerable number of churches to supply the pulpits on Sunday evenings with speakers, natives of these lands.

Another and most important feature of the association is its relation to the nationalist societies in our country made up of immigrants from these countries. There have arisen during the war all over our country strong organizations of Czechoslovaks, Poles, Jugoslavs, Greeks, and others in addition to those which previously existed. Some of these organizations have thousands of members, meeting houses of their own, newspapers, lodges, and many of the social aspects of a vigorous cultural life.

But hitherto these agencies have had a benefical effect only upon their own adherents; they have not been used to make the lands from which the immigrants come better known to Americans. The American Mid-European Association will endeavor to help in this direction. We have in New York a large Bohemian settlement on the upper east side from Sixty-fifth to Eighty-fifth Streets. They form a splendid body of citizens who carry on all the activities mentioned above. Their splendid meeting house, John Hus Hall, is decorated in a truly artistic manner. Dr. Masaryk himself suggested the possibility of having an art exhibit in it. Specimens not only of the painting and sculpture of Bohemia might be brought here, but specimens of the household arts, the lace of the peasant women's evenings, the linen work, toys, glassware, &c.

The result of this policy is expected not merely to spread a knowledge of these new countries among Americans but also to spread Americanization among the immigrants. The American Mid-European Association by means of lectures, public meetings, debates, prizes for essays on various aspects of American life, and by other methods hopes to render efficient service in the policy of Americanization that interests so many of our citizens just now.

CIVILIZATION A MOCKERY IN THE RUSSIA OF TODAY

Special Correspondent of The New York Times Paints a Terrible Picture of Conditions in the Distracted Land—"Russia Is the First Great Reconstruction Problem Facing the United States and the Allies."

VLADIVOSTOK, Dec. 20, 1918.

THAT Russia's civil war is not ended, and that it will not end until the allied nations decide at the Peace Conference in Europe what policy they intend to follow in Russia toward the Bolsheviki are impressions which become convictions as one travels today through Central Siberia to Ekaterinburg and Cheliabinsk, the headquarters of the Czechoslovak armies. From the shores of Lake Baikal to the Ural Mountains Russia assumes her common dress of chaos, the garb the Czar designed and the Bolsheviki sewed for the land and the people. Everywhere the inhabitants ask:

"When shall we have peace in Russia?" "What are the Allies going to do?"

And from all sides comes the same answer: "Nobody knows."

Gone are the days when the proud armies of the Romanoff marched through the streets of capitals and villages singing:

"Who were our grandmothers?
Our grandmothers were the white tents.
And who were our grandfathers?
Our grandfathers were the Czar's victories."

Chaos rules Russia today with greater power than the Czars possessed in their sublimest days, for not only is Russia at the mercy of universal disorder, but the Allies are seemingly powerless.

But while the others hesitate the Bolsheviki work to further disorganize and disgrace Russia. Trotzky stated recently, according to the Siberian newspapers, that Russia's civil war would last fifty years. If this is a good forecast, if Russia is to be another Mexico, except on a grander scale, then Russia's civil war is not only not ended, but it is just beginning, and the overthrow of the Czar and the Red Army reign of terror were the prologue and preface to one of the greatest and most tragic national dramas in history. And who today can doubt Trotzky's statement when there is no more a central Government even in Siberia and when bands of revolutionary Generals and soldiers seize cities, towns and provinces and exact tribute, when in European Russia the Bolsheviki and the Allies fight near Kiev, when General Denekin and his army of Cossacks march across Southern Russia, when the Czechoslovak armies hold the Ural Mountain front, and when a dictator rules in Omsk who is not recognized by leaders in other parts of Siberia?

What is there but chaos, chaos everywhere; when hundreds of thousands of refugees live in box cars and wander from freight yards to freight yards, when factories are closed because of strikes or a lack of raw materials; when any organization, mission, or army can have a special train or car without paying for it or without buying railway tickets; when the educated and wealthy stand at street corners selling their clothes to pay their living expenses; when banks are robbed and people murdered with the guilty escaping prosecution and arrest?

Russia is in that sad state where civilization is a mockery.

NO CONCERTED ACTION.

And the pity of it is that no one seems to know what should be done to help Russia, or, if there is some one person of some great nation which knows, either power or decision is lacking. Russia today is a prostrate patient, baffling the greatest political specialists in the world. Some advocate an army, others maintain that an efficient and effective army is impossible. Some leaders believe in allied military intervention, but soldiers throughout the world are weary of fighting. The militant spark which makes men fight is dimmed. The war is over in Europe and the common masses here do not understand why the war does not end in Russia.

Opposing these military specialists are others who believe that Russia should be left alone to work out her own destiny; to fight a fratricidal war until the strong survive and the weak perish. Others believe that Russia should be fed and clothed and rehabilitated economically. No two nations agree, while the Russian people look first to Omsk, then to Moscow and Petrograd, or Washington, Vladivostok, Paris, or London, expecting all the while to see the sun rise on a new era, but witnessing daily the same red sunset, ending a day of terror and forecasting another day of strife and suffering.

From Irkutsk to Ekaterinburg Asiatic Russia takes on its real appearance as an empire without order.

But this is not new. Russia has been disorganized and disturbed long before the revolution. The revolution only raised the curtain for the whole world to see the spectacle. There was bribery and corruption before, the Government was disorganized, people were dissatisfied, the railroads were overburdened; there were traffic tie-ups, crowded prisons, plots, and counterplots. The story of Russia today is not new; it is only a new version, but what makes it important, perhaps more important than ever before, is that the United States and the Allies promised to help Russia, and the Russian people want to know where that help is and when it may be expected. They also wish to know what kind of aid is to be forthcoming—economical, political, social, moral, or military.

One soon learns how keen is this Russian wish when one traverses that part of Russia along the Trans-Siberian Railway between Irkutsk and the present front. Perhaps that part of the world, which is 15,000 miles away, does not wish to be disturbed by the situation in Russia, but the fact remains that here, in this part of the world, several million people are interested in knowing whether or not the Allies intend to keep their promises. It does not matter so much what is being said and thought about Russia in the other section of the universe as it does what this country is saying about the Allies and America. And it is the opinion and sentiment of Central Siberia which I propose to present in this letter, describing my journey in November and December from Irkutsk to Ekaterinburg and back again. This is to be a statement of what others think of us. In the words of the latest song in Moscow:

"Forget your fireplaces; the fires have gone out"—and think about Russia.

TWELVE VIEWS ON RUSSIA.

In a few sentences these are some of the conflicting expressions one hears in Russia today about America, Russia, and the Allies:

1.—Russia can never help herself to order. There never will be a strong Government in Russia until the Allies establish such a Government and maintain it.

2.—Without military aid from the Allies, which means the United States, the Bolsheviki will never be overthrown.

3.—If all foreigners would get out of Russia and let the Russian people alone there would soon be order here.

4.—A military dictatorship is the only solution of Russia's present problems.

5.—The Russian people want a monarchy. A Socialistic Government is not the wish of a majority of the people.

6.—The Social Revolutionists made the first revolution a success, and Russia's salvation lies in their hands.

7.—Give Russia food, household supplies, clothing, raw materials, and other supplies, distribute them without favor and at reasonable prices, and Russia will work out her own destiny.

8.—Let the Japanese come in.

9.—Keep the Japanese out of Russia.

10.—Reorganize the Russian Army, supply it with war materials, and the new army will save Russia.

11.—But don't give Russia to Germany.

12.—Some nation will get Russia if the Allies do not come in now. What has become of the allied promises to help Russia?

These are twelve main varieties of opinions expressed among inhabitants and foreigners of Asiatic Russia today. I believe this represents, also, the chief views of Russians of all classes and from all parts of the country, except the Bolsheviki, because Siberian Russia does not represent today what it represented before the Bolsheviki uprisings. Siberian Russian opinion is the opinion of Bolshevikiless Russia because in every city of Asiatic Russia now are political leaders, officers, merchants, landowners, peasants, traders, doctors, lawyers, and laborers from Petrograd, Moscow, Libau, Riga, Kovno, Vilna, Brest-Litovsk, Kharkoff, Kieff, Odessa, and elsewhere. They have come here to escape the Bolsheviki and, if they can, to help Russia overthrow the Bolsheviki. I met men and women from all parts of European Russia on my two trips across Central Siberia. These people are living in Omsk, Ekaterinburg, Tomsk, Tiumen, Taiga, Irkutsk, Cheliabinsk, Marinsk, and other cities, awaiting the day when Russia makes peace with herself and they can return to their homes. "To our homes," and not "to the front" is the cry of the Russian people today. If their wish could be expressed in a few words, it would be this: "Let us live at home in peace."

How this wish can be realized is the problem of Russia. How the people can be helped to attain this is the problem of the United States and the Allies.

EN ROUTE TO EKATERINBURG.

In a general way there is little difference in the situation between Vladivostok and Irkutsk and the conditions from Lake Baikal to the present front. The people, the schools, churches, railroads, and cities are very similar. Perhaps the sole difference is the presence of more soldiers in cities nearer the front, but there is the same lack of supplies and raw materials, high prices, and scarcity of sugar, tea, coffee, and tobacco.

Traveling from Irkutsk to Ekaterinburg one passes through two important cities, Tomsk and Omsk. The former has been for many years the educational centre of Siberia. There is a large university there where refugee students and professions from all sections of Russia have gathered since the Bolsheviki began to persecute the educated as well as the rich and professional citizens. The great white university buildings cover several acres of ground and compare quite favorably with many prominent American universities. It resembles, perhaps, better than any university I have seen the famous old university of Geneva, Switzerland.

Tomsk, being an educational centre, has exerted a deal of influence upon Siberian and Russian politics. During the time the Siberian Government, with headquarters in Omsk, controlled the country, several important political meetings and conventions were held there. Tomsk is also the home of Premier Vologodsky of the All-Russian Government and the present Premier acting under the Dictator, Admiral Koltshak. Tomsk is also, next to Ekaterinburg, the most beautiful city in this part of Russia.

Omsk has gained its fame and importance only as a seat of the Government. After the convention held at Ufa during the Summer, when all of the local Governments of Siberia, Archangel, and the Urals formed the All-Russian Government, Omsk was selected as the temporary capital, and the Directory and Cabinet opened offices there. The National Assembly, which was controlled by the industrial workers of the Left wing of the Social Revolutionists, by men with very extreme views, held themselves somewhat aloof from the Central Government and made Ekaterinburg the seat of the national Parliament. Omsk, as a city, can only be described as a disappointment.

From Omsk one journeys to Ekaterinburg, the city which became famous with the discovery of the platinum and gold mines near by, and the Ural stones, such as Alexandrites, emeralds, rubies, sapphires, aqua marines, &c. Ekaterinburg is also one of the largest industrial cities in the Ural Mountains. It is a city of palaces built by mine owners, grain merchants, and dealers in precious stones. Politically, in addition to its importance as the former meeting place of the National Assembly, or Congress, it is the present headquarters in Russia of the Czechoslovak National Council.

When I first visited Omsk the All-Russian Government was in control of that part of Russia free from the Bolsheviki, and gave promise of being a real Russian Government which might ultimately be powerful enough to move into Moscow and Petrograd to dislodge the Bolsheviki. But between my first and second visits to the temporary capital the All-Russian Directory was overthrown, a Dictator was named, the National Assembly was dissolved, and the members escorted to another city under protection of the Czech Army. The complete story of this coup d'état cannot be told at this time because of the part played in it by certain important powers, but this much can be truthfully said: When the All-Russian Government was overthrown, the Liberal or Democratic forces of Russia, as distinguished between the Bolsheviki and the reactionary or monarchistic party, suffered a defeat the extent of which cannot be estimated.

It may be stated now and proved later, when all the facts can be published, that the foreigners in Russia had more to do with the collapse of the All-Russian Government than the Russians, and that if several foreign powers through their official representatives had not been interfering with Russia's internal affairs the Government would very likely still be in Omsk. But, in considering what should be done in Russia today, facts and facts alone must be considered, and the main facts are that a Government in Russia as long as there is a civil war in progress will be about as stable as the ruble on foreign exchanges. Secondly, after once announcing military intervention in Siberia and Archangel the Allies made a fatal mistake in not keeping their promise. Thirdly, by refusing to pay serious attention to the struggle of the Liberal forces of Russia to establish a representative government in Omsk, by delaying recognition of the All-Russian Government and by not working in harmony with each other, the Allies contributed to the establishment of the present Koltshak dictatorship.

HOW TO HELP RUSSIA.

But the mistakes which have been made are as water over the dam. The allied problem is how to help Russia under the present conditions and circumstances. Fundamentally there are two main methods:

1. Military intervention via Vladivostok, Archangel, Murmansk, the Black Sea, and the Baltic, after first giving military aid to the Czechoslovak armies holding the Ural front.

2. The present laissez-faire policy of limited military assistance and with the chief emphasis upon economic rehabilitation.

Both of these policies have as much in their favor as against them. There are great drawbacks to both, and the chief drawback is delay and indecision. But after traveling some twelve thousand miles in Siberia and knowing something of conditions in that part of Russia formerly occupied by the German armies one can state, at least, the arguments now advanced for and against military intervention. And it should be understood that opinion in Russia today is sharply divided.

The Czechoslovak armies are fighting against the Bolsheviki for two reasons; one, they were attacked by the Bolsheviki when they were en route to Vladivostok for France and they had to fight in self-defense; secondly, they remained in Russia as an allied army at the direct and official request of the Allies, expressed through the official representatives of the allied powers. I can establish this by documentary evidence. This being true, the Allies have not kept their promises to the Czechoslovaks, and, had they done as they expected and promised in July, 1918, the present status of Russia would hardly be confronting them.

The chief arguments against military intervention at that time were those which still hold good, that the Russian people would have resented the appearance of an allied army, composed of all Allies, European, and Asiatic. Secondly, military intervention in Russia will strengthen one class above all others; the military caste which was the chief support of the Czar's Government. Even today, if there is military intervention in Russia, the direct outcome will be the establishment of a military dictatorship under one of the numerous Generals of the old régime. And it might ultimately lead to the re-establishment of a monarchy in Russia. For this reason those who are intriguing and working for military intervention are mostly officers and officials of the military caste or of the Monarchist Party.

But the main question for the Allies to decide at the preliminary Peace Conference in Europe is what attitude they are going to take toward the Bolsheviki. That is the crux of the Russian problem. If the Allies intend to oppose Bolshevism and attempt to stem the tide of industrial dissatisfaction which produces Bolshevism and which keeps it alive in Russia, then there is only one means, and that is to declare war against the Bolsheviki and fight anarchism as earnestly as they fought imperialism in Central Europe. If the Allies are to oppose Bolshevism, military opposition is the only opposition which will succeed. After the Allies decide this question, all other problems in Russia will be solved when the Bolsheviki are overthrown.

It is obvious to any one who travels in Siberia today that the Allies cannot continue to disregard Russia as they have this year. If they do, Russia must be abandoned to a civil war between the Monarchists, the Bolsheviki, the Mensheviki, the Social Revolutionists, and the Social Democrats.

From Vladivostok to the Ural Mountains Russia is in a chaotic state; from the Urals to Poland the situation is worse. Millions of Russians want peace, and if they have to fight indefinitely for it, the whole world will be affected and harmed, even if the rest of the world remains only as a spectator.

Russia is the first great reconstruction problem facing the United States and the Allies, and the sooner the Allies decide what their reconstruction policy is going to be, the sooner will there be internal peace in Russia.

Russian Masses Strive for Free Education---Chaos on the Trans-Siberian Railroad---Work of Americans

IRKUTSK, Nov. 6, 1918.

BEFORE the revolution there were four ways of crossing Siberia—by first, second, and third class railway coaches, and fourth-class box cars. Today there are but two—box cars and special trains. Almost every day both varieties leave Vladivostok for "somewhere in Russia," and after they depart no one can tell where they will ultimately arrive or when.

Railroading, like everything else in Russia, has been revolutionized; that is, revolutionized in the wrong way. If you travel by box car you fight for standing room in a red, four-wheeled, antiquated car about one-third the size of an American freight car and about as comfortable. If you are lucky you get a place near the stove in the centre; if unlucky you may be crammed into one corner without heat or light. By the box car route you ride as long as you can endure the unventilated interior and the company of Russia's unfortunates.

With the special train it is different. Instead of standing or sleeping in line from eighteen to thirty-six hours to buy a fourth-class ticket, and instead of taking your chances with the Russian trainman and his whip you apply to the Interallied Railway Commission in Vladivostok, and this commission, if it looks with favor upon your "mission," (you must be on a mission to get a special car,) will issue a car or a special train, whichever you desire.

After you obtain the permit entitling you to a train your trouble begins, because every General, commission, Colonel, mission, society, and army has already confiscated the best cars, and what you get is what they leave behind. The car the Red Cross drew for some of the doctors and newspaper correspondents had been a "has been" for several years. The conductor claimed he had been living in it for six months in the Vladivostok yards. Last Spring, he said, his car was ordered to Moscow, but the Bolsheviki got there first and he and his sleeper were sidetracked in the freight yards of Vladivostok, where they had a good view of the Japan Sea and some of the millions of dollars' worth of ammunition which covers a ten-acre plot of land along the Trans-Siberian.

It does not matter by which train you leave the city, because one is as apt to make good time as another. There being no time tables, the trains run whenever the tracks are clear, and it is a fortunate thing that the Russian trainmen still have a sufficient interest in their work to take care in dispatching trains. This seems to be about the only part of the railroad which is not topsy turvy.

SLOW TIME ON THE RAILWAY.

If you are fortunate in your special you may arrive in Harbin before the "regular" box-car train. The chances are that you can do this if you have a sufficient amount of influence with the Russian railway officials, but after you arrive in the chief city of Manchuria you can never tell when you may leave. It is all a gamble. You gamble with time, with money, and with patience, and if you can speak Russian you gamble with your language, too. There was a time before the revolution when you could go from Vladivostok to Moscow in nine days. Now it takes ten days to go to Irkutsk by special.

It does not take long for one to become accustomed to railway travel in Siberia. It is bad business, and you accept it as such. You resign yourself to Fate, you get out your army blankets and your air pillow and make a bed; you see to it that your larder is well stocked. Then you forget everything else and trust to the revolution not to make any changes until you reach your destination, which is a fluctuating point on the map of Siberia.

My destination is the Czech front, which is a movable line somewhere in the heart of Russia, and I have reached Irkutsk, a beautiful city with large modern buildings and great churches near Lake Baikal. I am still at least a week from the front, where it is now, but within a week it may move nearer or further away. Life and travel alike are unknown quantities in Siberia, and I am traveling!

As far as Tchita there are two routes, one in Siberia proper and the other through North-Central Manchuria. Originally there was but one Transsiberian line from Tchita, and that connected with the Chinese Eastern Railway, but after the Russo-Japanese war the Russian Government began the construction of the Amur railway along the Siberian-Manchurian border, so that, in event of another war with Japan or any other nation in the Far East, Russian trains could be run to Vladivostok solely over Russian territory. On the Amur railway to Tchita there is one chief town, Khabarovsk, where the American and Japanese troops are stationed in the old barracks of the Fifth Siberian Army Corps. Along the Chinese Eastern line, through Manchuria our train, which reached Irkutsk after seemingly numberless delays, stopped at Harbin, Manchuria City, and Tchita long enough to permit us to glimpse the cities as a whole, and in some instances to examine and study the schools, the bazaars, the shops, and the churches—for Siberia has all the earmarks of civilization, if it does not have anything else. Every city of any size, and there are several with over 50,000 and 100,000 inhabitants, has its opera house or theatre, its movies and cabarets, its cafés and midnight restaurants, and its banks, jewelry shops, fur stores, and Japanese curio stands. Cities like Harbin, Manchuria City, and Tchita have their unpaved dirt streets, their log huts and community cellars, as well as their brick and stone business blocks.

No city, however, is without its droshkies; those four-wheeled, open, one-seated carriages drawn by Siberian ponies and driven by ex-peasants, ex-soldiers, ex-vodka drinkers, refugees, or ex-exiles. Russia, like France, can be distinguished from every other country in the world by its droshky drivers. They are an unchangeable quantity, with the same long, unkempt whiskers, the same curly fur hats, and long, threadbare fur-lined coats, and felt boots. Their eyes betray their ignorance and their innocence, and still, with all their faults, they are the sponges of Russian public opinion. They are good reporters, because they have no thoughts of their own; they repeat only what they have heard their passengers say or what they have been told. They disseminate news, they keep scandal alive, they absorb opinion, and they charge foreigners their maximum fare plus a generous profit. Their ambition is to make their gross receipts cover their expenses every day, and when that is done neither money nor influence will cause them to work an hour longer. They are men with fixed limits, and they know their limit!

To see these men in their droshkies or their sleighs and to see the thousands of miles of undeveloped, snow-covered land, is to see Siberia. These two, the people and the land, are the dress of Siberia. Everything else is decoration.

MIDNIGHT CROWDS IN HARBIN.

We sauntered about Harbin, after running the gantlet of the fur dealers along the line and without being disturbed by the Japanese troops guarding the railway. Through the narrow streets of the old city and the broad, unimproved thoroughfares of the new town we rode in our droshky or trekked afoot. In the streets were armed Chinese soldiers, the city police, while marching through town vodka, champagne, rich foods and the "life of the East." That there should be so much money to squander in this part of the world is difficult for an American to comprehend.

Leaving Harbin, we journeyed on by easy stages to Manchuria City, the last Chinese station. All along the line from Vladivostok to Manchuria we met the American railway engineers, those practical men and the experts from the United States who came to Russia with John R. Stevens to take charge of this railway line under the Kerensky Government. But today they are men without a railroad. While they are scattered along the route of the Trans-Siberian they have no authority. They ride the trains, they attempt to introduce modern systems of train dispatching, and for a few hours every day they control the telegraph wire transmitting American messages and news. They are living for the day when they can assume control of the road and make it as efficient as they have made our own lines in the United States. But that day is always the day after tomorrow. Should the time ever come, however, when the American engineers can take hold of the Trans-Siberian there will be nothing about this line which they will not know.

A LONELY AMERICAN ENGINEER.

Our train was passing through a small town one day when one of the Red Cross nurses opened the window to glimpse the station. Immediately there was a call in English:

"Won't you please come out here a moment. I haven't seen an American woman for nearly a year, and I have about forgotten what they look like."

It was an American engineer, alone in a small town in Manchuria, filling his place in Uncle Sam's worldwide war program; a program which will be, if it is not already, something of a world peace program also. And this engineer was beginning his second Winter in Siberia, a volunteer and almost an exile.

In Manchuria and in Siberia a traveler today meets the representatives of two other American organizations, the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. It is a common sight to pass Y. M. C. Our army may not be very widely scattered in the Far East, but every other American organization is. Day after day you pass middle-aged and young men, riding in box cars or dilapidated second-class coaches—American men, most of them volunteers.

One meets also another class of Americans in this country—the Russians. Germans, Austrians, and Czechs who have lived in the United States. From Vladivostok to Irkutsk, at nearly every station, we met persons who could speak English and who said that New York or New Jersey or Pennsylvania had been their home. We were pushing our way through the crowded waiting room of the Manchuria City station when some

PLAYS AND PLAYERS IN THE NEW YORK THEATRES

THE GODS OF DUNSANY

By JOHN CORBIN.

WHAT manner of man is this Lord Dunsany?—or, rather, what manner of dramatist, for that is what really concerns us.

"The Gods of the Mountain" commanded profound admiration. Here was a playwright who fashioned a world of his own, different from any we had seen before, or imagined—a world of strange beauty and awe, which he yet made as familiar and real, even humorous, as Broadway or the Bowery. And out of it he evolved situation, a catastrophe, as new to the theatre as it was overwhelming, astounding. With a single play he established himself a genius—a genius of no great calibre, perhaps, yet as distinct as Barrie or Shaw, Synge or Maeterlinck. Plays followed which bespoke the same power of imagination and humor, but which were of minor import and less thrilling—plays in which the gods had no part. Then came "A Night at an Inn," giving us a world which, to be sure, was slightly different from that of "The Gods of the Mountain," but a catastrophe which, though thrilling, irresistible, was yet the same. One began to recognize a pattern, to suspect a method, even a trick. It has been said of the Irish playwrights, who profess to believe in the fairies, that at best they believe they believe in them. Was that the case also with the gods of Dunsany? Were they a literary convention which, with repeated use, would decline into a sort of sublime stage property?

The suspicion was confirmed in reading "The Laughter of the Gods." Here, again, to be sure, was a milieu quite new and satire that was keener, more searching; but the catastrophe was the same—except that it was less striking, for no monster appeared, grotesque and hulking, to wreak his revenge against sacrilege. Instead, there was a mere crumbling of walls amid the rattling of stage thunder. And then the play was produced. It cannot be said that the catastrophe was as striking as in the two previous pieces. Drama and acting are more potent, always, than the effects of mechanician and stage carpenter. The demolition of a palace amid the mockery of reverberant thunder has not the same power upon the nerves as the bodily presence of a sublimely raging idol. Yet it somehow seemed that the play had a fuller spiritual content, that it reached deeper and further into the imagination. More than ever one felt the presence of religious mystery and awe, of a force in human life that is above mankind, yet always present and imminent—divinely jealous and watchful.

And so, what manner of man is this Lord Dunsany—or, rather, what are the manners of his gods? If we know that, we shall know his innermost soul; for there is deep truth in the epigram of Voltaire, that man creates god in his own image. Now Lord Dunsany's first book, as it happens, was an attempt to create an Olympus of his own and people it with an assemblage of deities, each with a personality and a power over human life acutely conceived and visualized. To me, at least, "The Gods of Pegana" (published in 1905, nine years before Dunsany commenced play writing) is autobiography, and all the more self-revealing because it is profoundly unconscious.

As an achievement of the imagination, this bible of the gods of Pegana is simply amazing. Except in being polytheistic, its conception of godhead has no trace of the influence of the Greeks, or of any other people. It lives in an unknown region, weirdly remote and spacious—surrounded by clouds of dusky splendor and illumined with the light that never was on sea or land. The very names of the deities are uncannily beautiful. Kib is the creator of Life, and he made us because he was bored in Pegana—made us restless, eager, striving, so as to amuse him the more. Mung was jealous of the work of Kib and became the Lord of Death, who makes his sign before us and we are still. But Limpang-Tung has a thought of the hearts of men, and he is the god of mirth by day and melodious minstrelsy. "I will send jests into the world and paint my picture in the sky, that men may see and rejoice." By night Yoharneth-Lahai is our friend and "sendeth dreams out of Pegana to please the people of Earth." There are also little gods of the home, who live not in Pegana—Pitsu, who stroketh the cat; Hobith, who calms the dog; Imborgie, the Lord of Dusk, who sitteth in a corner far off and whose children are dancing shadows, shy and silent. But greater than these little gods is their enemy Roon, the god of Going, who drives man always away from the hearth into the furthermost places. Sish is the god of Time, a hound-god who leaps forward forever, devouring all things in his path. And in the end, when Sish has swept away the world and its cities, having no more to devour, he shall suddenly die. Such are the gods of whose deeds the little book chiefly tells us. Life and death, minstrelsy and dreams, the fireside and adventure. A world made for the sport of the gods, and at the end of all things—nothing!

But this is not all. Above these is a greater god who made them; Mana-Yood-Sushai. "And when he had made the other gods, he made Skarl, and Skarl made a drum, and began to beat upon it that he might drum forever. And because of the drumming of Skarl, did Mana-Yood-Sushai grow drowsy and fall asleep. Whether the season be Winter or Summer, Skarl still beateth his drum, for the purposes of the gods are not yet fulfilled. Sometimes the arm of Skarl grows weary; but still he beateth his drum, that the gods may do the work of the gods, and the worlds go on, for if he cease for an instant then Mana-Yood-Sushai will start awake, and there will be worlds nor gods no more." So in Pegana, quite as in Mr. Wells's more recent theology of "God the Invisible King," there is a greater duty whose ways are not the ways of the gods men know and pray to, whose thoughts are not their thoughts.

Unlike Mr. Wells's kingly god, however, the gods of Lord Dunsany have little care for human joy or sorrow, little heed whether we of the lower earth live for them or against them. They are even more remote and indifferent than the gods of Olympus. For in Pegana such heroism as that of Herakles, such sacrifice as that of Prometheus, is unheard of, undreamed of. There is no Eros, no Psyche—no god of love or of the soul. There is not even the idea of good and evil. And so there is neither heaven nor hell—nor any kind of immortality. No deeper or more abiding consolation of the spirit is to be found than that of Mung, the God of Death. "Were the forty million years before thy coming intolerable to thee? Not less tolerable to thee shall be the forty million years to come!" The thought of Dunsany the theologian is occupied mainly with the immensities of time and of space, the visual glories of mountain and sea, the ceaseless panorama of change, and the ultimate annihilation of all things. Its dominant mood is awe merging in terror.

The nine little plays which Lord Dunsany has thus far written show a similar lack of interest in the human heart. In imagination and fancy, humor and satire, they are works of an inspiration absolutely authentic; but love has not touched them, nor has any high heroism, any deep aspiration of the spirit. And the same is true, as far as I know, of the half dozen of volumes of fables and tales that lie between "The Gods of Pegana" and the plays.

In the three plays in hand, however, of which the gods are the central figures, a new idea is manifest, and it verges closely upon the idea of moral responsibility. At least as far as their own dignity is concerned, these gods are terribly in earnest. The spirit of Jehovah has entered Pegana—or at worst the lightning of Jove's anger. Is the playwright's interest in this new idea merely the interest of the artist, the creator of dramatic effects? That is possible. If so, however, it is hard to account for the air of authenticity, the increasing sense of absolute power in a story thrice told. To me, at least, it seems much more likely that the repetition results from the compulsion of a fresh idea, of a new and persistent inspiration.

As yet one can hardly be sure of this. The books of tales written before the war showed a constant growth in range of subject and in technical command, but there was also, perhaps, a fading of imaginative power, a paling of inspiration. Sheer imagination gave way to make-believe, broad humor and biting satire to self-conscious, modish fooling. It was as if the life of the officers' mess and of fashionable London were cribbing and confining the creative dreamer. What will be the result of the war? One result it has already had, in eliciting from Captain Lord Dunsany a word which, for all the simplicity of its tone and manner, bears unmistakably the note of heroism. It is in the preface of "The Last Book of Wonder," written in 1916 while recovering from a wound, and it is addressed to an America as yet neutral. "I do not know where I may be when this preface is read. * * * To some of you in America this may seem an unnecessary and wasteful quarrel, as other people's quarrels often are; but it comes to this, that though we are all killed there will be songs again, but if we were to submit and so survive, there could be neither songs nor dreams, nor any joyous, free things any more. And do not regret the lives that are wasted among us, or the work that the dead would have done, for war is no accident that man's care could have averted, but is as natural, though not as regular, as the tides; as well regret the things that the tide has washed away, which destroys and cleanses and crumbles, and spares the minutest shells. * * * I offer you these books of dreams from Europe as one throws things of value, if only to one's self, at the last moment out of a burning house."

To the unmorality, unspirituality, of the gods of Pegana, Dunsany has added at least one flame of godlike passion, and it has so engrossed him that he has labored it thrice. Now, out of the great conflagration, comes the word of a hero. What of the future? Will he add to his repertory of great themes—or will he continue the slenderest, the most limited of the undoubted geniuses of the drama?

THE RETURN OF RANSONE

TILLIE," the genre comedy of Pennsylvania Dutch life, has served to bring back to Broadway a comedian who has been missing from these parts for many years. This is John W. Ransone, whose impersonation of the country physician is perhaps the foremost bit of characterization in the play. Since his great success as the brewer with the catch line "Vas you ever in Zinsinnati?" in "The Prince of Pilsen" sixteen years ago Ransone has been seen in a production in this city only once. And that was in "Yvette," the musical comedy which ran for one memorable night on Broadway two seasons ago.

Ransone played in "The Prince of Pilsen" for years and years and then again for years. The first run of the piece in New York was five months and was followed by eight months in London. Returning to this country, Ransone was then identified with it for innumerable seasons on tour, and a few years ago, when the piece was revived in the provinces, he played it again.

The story of his stage beginnings is interesting, for his first stage material was written for him by none other than Eugene Field. Field, who had not yet won his recognition, was general utility man on the St. Joseph, Mo., Gazette, St. Joe was Ransone's home town, and at the age of sixteen he was the principal out-up of the vicinage, being regularly featured as end man in an amateur organization known as the Missouri Valley Minstrels, for which Field did all the writing.

After Ransone had enjoyed a year of local popularity a minstrel company stranded in Kansas City, and the advance agent, a cheery optimist, came on to St. Joseph to see if he could persuade any one to put up sufficient money to pay the railroad fares of the organization into the latter town. He found a man who agreed to do this for a percentage of the local receipts, if "that Ransone boy" could be persuaded to go on and play one of the ends and be featured in the billing. Young Ransone was persuaded and the show was given to two capacity audiences. Ransone left town with the minstrels next day and remained with them all season.

He next formed a variety combination with a performer named Adams, the two doing what was then known as a "Dutch act." That particular kind of comedy entertainment was just beginning to come into vogue. A few years later he had accumulated enough surplus capital to produce a sensational "comedy melodrama" called "Across the Atlantic," in which he played a protean rôle, appearing as the cashier of a steamship line, a negro valet, a German guide and an Irish coachman. "Across the Atlantic" served him for ten years. Once he got as far as New York with it, playing an engagement of two weeks at the old Olympic Theatre at the corner of Prince Street and the Bowery. This was in 1881. He needed a company manager for the metropolitan engagement and asked the late Leander Richardson to recommend one. Richardson suggested Daniel Frohman, who was at that time just beginning a theatrical career that was destined to make him an outstanding figure.

There followed a long series of engagements in comic opera and extravaganza, and then came Ransone's famous impersonation of Richard Croker in a monologue which he delivered at the old Koster & Bial's Music Hall on West Thirty-fourth Street. This was at the height of the Lexow investigation. Ransone appeared for fifty-two consecutive weeks at Koster & Bial's, establishing a record for the longest continuous run ever enjoyed by a vaudeville entertainer in this city. His salary was raised from $125 to $650 in two weeks. Mr. Ransone later impersonated David B. Hill, Marcus Hanna, and Colonel Roosevelt, and claims to have been the first actor to have ever delineated the latter on the stage.

In recent years he has confined himself almost entirely to vaudeville, except during those periods when "The Prince of Pilsen" was in revival.

THE WEEK'S HAPPENINGS

IT is a stagnant week in the theatres so far as new productions go, the weekly change of program at the French Theatre being the sole novelty.

LE MENTEUR.—Tomorrow night at the Theatre du Vieux Colombier.

This is a farce by Pierre Corneille, and will be acted by a cast which will include Robert Bogaert, Henri Dhurtal, Marcel Millet, Jean Sarment, and others.

"As You Like It" will be the next production of the Shakespeare Playhouse, to be presented by them at the Plymouth Theatre on the afternoon of Friday, Feb. 7, and indefinitely thereafter on Friday afternoons and Saturday mornings. "Hamlet" will again be acted on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning of the coming week, and throughout February will be played on Thursday afternoons.

At the Hippodrome tonight a performance will be given under the auspices of Father Vincent de Paul McGean for east side children. Among the performers will be Donald Brian, Florence Reed, William Collier, Thomas A. Wise, William Courtenay, Wilton Lackaye, Patricia Collinge, Frisco, and many others.

The After-Care Home for Crippled Children will be the beneficiary of a performance at the Century Theatre tonight. Ed Wynn will be master of ceremonies, and the program will include Joseph Sabtley, Ann Wheaton, Ivy Sawyer, John E. Hazzard, and a long list of musical comedy others.

"A Little Journey," having found the Little Theatre too small for it, will be transferred tomorrow night to the Vanderbilt. The succeeding attraction at Mr. Ames's playhouse is unannounced.

Tonight's plays for soldiers will again be two in number—"East Is West," at the Astor, and "Cappy Ricks," at the Morosco. There will be, in addition, the customary vaudeville matinée at the Manhattan Opera House today.

The fifth performance of "Guilbur," with Yvette Guilbert in the cast, will be given at the Neighborhood Playhouse tonight. The production will be repeated next Friday, Saturday, and Sunday nights.

THE SUBWAY CIRCUIT.

STANDARD — "Come Out of the Kitchen."

SHUBERT-RIVIERA—"An Ideal Husband."

LOEW'S SEVENTH AV.—"Business Before Pleasure."

BRONX OPERA HOUSE — "Seven Days' Leave."

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

PHILIP MOELLER, who contributed "Madame Sand" to the roster of last season, has now written a play entitled "Molière," dealing, it need hardly be added, with incidents in the life of the French playwright. Furthermore—albeit there has been no official communiqué to that effect—Henry Miller will produce the play in the near future, with himself in the title rôle. The piece is said to have been designed originally for the use of George Arliss.

The play is in four acts, and throws its hero much into the company of Louis XIV. of France. There are at least three great acting parts in the play—those of Molière and the King, and that of the leading feminine character. Holbrook Blinn, according to report, will play the King, and Blanche Bates will be the third of a trio of stars.

These be prosperous days and nights in the playhouses, on the road as well as in the metropolis. At least half a dozen plays which were received with anything but acclaim upon their opening nights are going along merrily, and two or three of them more than merrily. As for those offerings which appealed to the critical and the uncritical alike, their prosperity knows no bounds. Ten thousand dollars weekly is by no means an unusual sum for a dramatic entertainment to be drawing, and several of them approach $15,000. The profits in such takings may be estimated from the fact that gross receipts of about $7,000, in most instances, turn in a small profit to the managerial coffers. As for the musical entertainments, they are attracting $12,000 to $18,000, dependent upon the capacities of their houses.

The authors of "The Woman in Room 13," it now appears, are really three in number instead of two, although the third, Percival Wilde, contributed but a single situation. The Wildian material, which is used in the prologue, was taken from a play of his authorship entitled "The Penalty," which has been long upon A. H. Woods's list. The Messrs. Shipman and Marcin, both of whom have access to the inner recesses of the Woods offices, saw Mr. Wilde's idea and fancied it. The latter is receiving a fixed weekly royalty therefor, and accordingly all hands are satisfied.

A play as produced is frequently a more composite work than the program credits it with being. An entire episode of "Eyes of Youth"—the scene in front of Rector's near the end of the play—was taken bodily from a play by Willard Mack entitled "Her Market Value," which never was seen in New York. Private settlement was probably made, but Mack was never publicly credited.

Not "Friendly Enemies," but "Uncle Sam," will be the title under which that war play will be produced in London. The presenting company is said to have sailed yesterday, and the play is scheduled to begin its London engagement at the Haymarket on or about Feb. 6. "Friendly Enemies," incidentally, continues to be one of the phenomenal theatrical moneymakers of all time. New York and Philadelphia are at present flocking to it, and there is a third company somewhere in the country, and a fourth in Australia, with London yet to come.

Another London opus which is heading for these shores is "Nurse Benson," which Marie Lohr, now an actress-manager, has long been playing at the Globe. The Frohman company has acquired the American rights, and it is probable that the play will be Ethel Barrymore's vehicle next season. The piece is a comedy by R. C. Carton and Justin Huntly McCarthy.

When the books are balanced several years from now it would be no great surprise to find "Tea for Three" standing high among the money-makers of the past decade. Its small cast, and the fact that no star is required for its proper presentation, promise to combine to bring this about. A. H. Woods lately paid a huge bonus, said to have been $35,000, for the London rights, and preparations are now under way to send numerous companies on the road next season. The number is certain to be at least eight, and may be ten or eleven.

IN THE VARIETIES.

PALACE—Trixie Friganza, the Morgan Dancers, Nance O'Neil, assisted by Alfred Hickson and Dodson Mitchell, in "The Common Standard"; Frisco and Loretta McDermott, Frances Kennedy, Harry Langdon and company, Bradna and Derrick, Bernard and Duffy.

COLONIAL—Phyllis Neilson-Terry, Leon Errol, Jean Adair in "Maggie Taylor, Waitress," Stan Stanley, Dickinson and Deagon, Cook and Savo, and others.

RIVERSIDE—Adelaide and Hughes, Eddie Leonard, Adele Rowland, Avon Comedy Four in "A Hungarian Rhapsody," Jimmy Hussey and William Worsley, Stephens and Hollister, and others.

COMING EVENTS

THERE have been produced in New York to date this season some ninety-five plays, and if previous years may be accepted as criterions there are approximately forty, haply as many as forty-five, still to come. From plans announced and unannounced it is now possible to list approximately thirty of these forty or forty-five, and possible also in some instances to foreshadow their nature and something of their contents.

Among the events scheduled is the reopening of the Greenwich Village Theatre as such, with Frank Conroy once more as its managing director. "Hobohemia," a comedy made by Sinclair Lewis from his Saturday Evening Post story of the same name, will be the opening attraction. The piece is a satire upon things Greenwichy, and attracted considerable attention in story form. Further plays may be expected at the Greenwich Village after "Hobohemia," and if reports are correct there will be a more frank attempt to appeal to the popular taste this season than was evidenced before.

Two other productions are definitely announced for the same week, with the prospect that others will be added to the list. On Monday night a musical comedy called the "Velvet Lady," which has been received with acclaim—unusual acclaim—in Philadelphia, will succeed "The Girl Behind the Gun" at the New Amsterdam. The piece is Fred Jackson's "A Full House" refurbished, with sinews by Henry Blossom and score by Victor Herbert. Georgia O'Ramey, presumably in the May Vokes rôle, will head the cast, and the long Ernest Torrence will also be among those present.

On the same night, as matters are now arranged, Marie Cahill will come back to town after a long absence to act in "Just Around the Corner," the work of George V. Hobart and Herbert Hall Winslow. It had something of a Summer run in Chicago last year, and since then has been fitted with a song or two. In story it is said to be not unlike "The Fortune Hunter."

In February New York will also see "The Net," a drama by Maravene Thompson. It is the production of Lee Kugel, who bides his time and moves carefully, his last offering in these parts having been "Old Lady 31," two years ago. "The Net" was played in Washington and Atlantic City in the Spring with encouraging results; its second series of try-out performances have been taking place in Ithaca during the past few days, and the New York opening date will doubtless be announced in a day or two. Kathlene McDonnell, who may be remembered as Robert Hilliard's leading woman in "Pride of Race," will have the leading rôle, and Charles Millward and Charles Dalton will be also of the company. Little is known of the play beyond the fact that the leading rôle calls for an actress of emotional powers.

George Arliss, in Barrie's one-act play, "A Well-Remembered Voice," and a revival of "The Mollusc," will begin an engagement in Chicago during the coming week, and will undoubtedly appear in New York before the season is over. William Anthony Maguire's play, "Everyman's Castle," is definitely scheduled for a metropolitan showing, probably during the week of Feb. 10. H. H. Frazee is the producer, and the company includes Robert Edeson, Wilton Lackaye, Pauline Lord, Katharine Kaelred, and Richard Taber. It is reported to be a morality play.

William A. Brady has been quietly preparing two shows in recent weeks, one of which probably will be brought to New York immediately. This is a play tentatively titled "The Flaming Soul," the work of Owen Davis and Charles Guernon, (the latter co-author of "Eyes of Youth,") and the cast will number House Peters, Clara Joel, Saxon Kling, Gertrude Hitz, and others. The central character of the play is a man who proclaims himself a law unto himself, and upon whom retribution duly descends in the expected dramatic fashion. The première performance was given in Stamford on Friday night.

The other Brady opus, which will be seen in Chicago before it is revealed in these parts, is on a timely subject. It is, in a word, a temperance play, the work of Edith Ellis, and entitled "Never Too Late." Henry Hull, late of "The Man Who Came Back," will have the leading rôle, and the company will include Tim Murphy and Edith Barker. The initial performance took place last night in distant Battle Creek, and the play will begin a run at Chicago's Princess Theatre tomorrow.

"A Dislocated Honeymoon," written by C. W. Bell, one of the authors of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," is reported to be heading this way, with a cast including Phoebe Foster, Amelia Bingham, and Harrison Hunter. So, also, is the Morosco production of "Please Get Married," a boudoir farce in which Ernest Truex, last seen here in "The Very Idea," will return to the stage. Edith Taliaferro has the leading woman's rôle in this piece, and the cast also includes William H. Sampson, the late waiter of "Be Calm, Camilla." "Please Get Married" was performed in Providence during the week which has just ended.

While on the subject of farces, the Shuberts are shaping one for the metropolis entitled "A Sleepless Night," the work of a pair of comparatively unknown dramatic writers. The cast, however, will enlist the services of such theatrical celebrities as Irene Fenwick, Donald Gallaher, and Ernest Glendinning.

"Toby's Bow," a comedy by John Taintor Foote, was produced in Wilkes-Barre during the past week by John D. Williams, and probably will be revealed here during the coming month. Mr. Foote is the writer of animal yarns, and the Toby of the title is an old negro servitor whose bow is equivalent to the formal recognition of the standing of the bowee. Norman Trevor and George Marion, the latter the well-known stage director, will head the cast. The piece, it is interesting to note, was played on the road on a previous occasion, (about a year ago,) with Frank Bacon in the rôle of Toby, to be taken on this occasion by Mr. Marion.

Arthur Bennett, better known under his nom de plume of L. B. Yates, is the author of a comedy entitled "Live Forever," formerly called "Sawdust and Sentiment," and now in process of production by George C. Tyler. It is a comedy of circus people, introducing as its characters many of those made familiar in Mr. Bennett's stories. It is reasonably certain to be revealed to New York this season.

More extended reference is made in another column to Henry Miller's prospective production of "Molière," which also, presumably, is intended for New York this season. Mr. Miller is also preparing a new play for Ruth Chatterton, the name of it being "Chloe in Love," and the author William J. Hurlbut. The piece will be produced out of town late next month.

A New York possibility for late next month or early March is a new play of which Marjorie Rambeau will be the star, despite the announced departure of that actress for London at the end of the revival of "Eyes of Youth." The announcement of the departure, to be sure, was made in all good faith, but since then Impresario Woods has discovered a play, and the outlook is now altered.

John Cort, turning aside momentarily from his musical labors, will presently produce a drama by Edward Clark, author of "De Luxe Annie" and others, entitled "Cosette." This play has already had a preliminary spin under the title of "Bruised Wings." The cast on this occasion will be headed by Josephine Victor and will include Otto Kruger, lately released from the United States Navy.

A new producing company will presently put forth a comedy yclept "Penny Wise," with the avowed intention of presenting it upon Broadway as soon as possible. "Penny Wise" is a play of Lancaster, and the leading rôle will be played by Molly Pearson, identified with Lancaster plays on prior occasions. It is being directed, incidentally, by Lionel Atwill, who has previously figured in the American theatre only as actor.

Mrs. Fiske is somewhere on the road with "Mis' Nelly of N'Orleans," Lawrence Eyre's play, and it is undoubtedly the intention of the management to produce the play here this season. Cohan & Harris are the entrepreneurs in the case. A comedy which is imminent—it will be produced here in March or thereabouts—is the "Adam and Eva" of Guy Bolton and George Middleton, who collaborated on the ultra-successful "Polly With a Past." Ruth Shepley, Courtney Foote, and Ferdinand Gottschalk head the cast of this piece, which will have its first production in Detroit next month under the Elliott-Comstock-Gest direction.

Cosmo Hamilton's "Scandal" is being got ready by the Shuberts and Walter Hast, and will undoubtedly be played here within a few weeks. It is dramatic in nature, being a dramatization of Mr. Hamilton's novel of the same name. Charles Cherry and Francine Larrimore will be featured here in the rôles now being played in London by Arthur Bouchier and Miss Kyrle Bellew.

"The Dancer," a comedy by Edward Locke, whose "The Climax" is once more on the local boards, is in rehearsal by the Shuberts, with Peggy Hopkins in the leading rôle. Miss Hopkins, until her recent appearance with Norman Trevor and Cyril Harcourt at the Comedy, has been identified principally with musical comedy.

There are, of course, a series of Portmanteau productions to look forward to at the Punch and Judy, and there is food for thought in the formation of the Theatre Guild, the members of which have bound themselves to produce two plays here before the season is over. The Theatre Guild is composed of half a dozen of more of the moving spirits of the late Washington Square Players, but it will be their policy to produce full-length plays on this occasion, instead of the one-act variety. Philip Moeller, Josephine A. Meyer, and others make up the sect.

There is said to be a new Cohan comedy somewhere in the offering. Mr. Cohan having been sufficiently encouraged by the success of "A Prince There Was" to sit down and turn out another. John D. Williams and Norman Trevor also will combine to produce a piece called "Three for Diana" some time after "Toby's Bow" is properly launched. The Shuberts have a comedy called "Chic" under way, of which nothing is known except the fact that it is the work of Julius Magnussen, a Danish dramatist. And Marie Dressler, absent from Broadway this long time, promises to return as soon as she finds the proper vehicle.

In a musical way there are some half a dozen or more ventures on the fire in addition to "The Velvet Lady," already listed. There is the new extravaganza for the Winter Garden, for example, which promises to crowd Al Jolson to another theatre within a month. "Monte Cristo, Jr.," is the new one, and the merrymakers will include the Dooley pair, William and Gordon Charles Hern, Charles Purcell, and others.

There is, too, the Cohan & Harris production of "A Royal Vagabond," now in process of repreparation after a preliminary spin of a few weeks. Adelaide and Hughes, now playing an intermittent fortnight in vaudeville, and Joe Santley's brother Frederick will be among those in the cast. And there is "Yesterday," written by Reginald De Koven and Glen McDonough, and styled an opera comique instead of a musical comedy. In its cast will be Vernon Stiles, Ruth Miller, and Payson Graham.

Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's twenty-year-old farce, "The Magistrate," turned into a musical show under the name of "The Boy," has been current at the Apollo in London for more than a year, and presently will be presented in New York under the fetching title of "Good Morning, Judge." In the cast, among others, will be Mollie King, George Hassell, Charles King, Margaret Dale, Grace Daniels, Edward Martindel, Shep Camp, and Jean Gauthier.

Roi Cooper Megrue's "Seven Chances" is the latest comedy about to be musicalized, and the results will be revealed to Boston in a few months. New York, according to present plans, will have the piece as a Summer show. "Hello, Alexander," will bring back McIntyre and Heath to musical comedy before the season is over. It is, in fact, now being played on the road. Also on the road is a musical piece called "Take It From Me," which is in the strange position of being unable to obtain a New York theatre at a time when theatres are far from scarce, and this despite the fact that the road has been paying some $15,000 weekly to view it.

There is said to be coming, also, "The Overseas Revue," which has lately had its première out of town. It numbers among its cast Elisabeth Brice and Will Morrissey, both of whom have lately returned to these shores after entertaining our men abroad. Mr. Morrissey is producer as well as player.

BULL'S-EYE HITS

By A. H. Woods

"An entire outfit of laughter," says Alan Dale of "Up in Mabel's Room" at the Eltinge Theatre.

The Sun said that "The Woman in Room 13" at the Booth Theatre enthralled the audience. Everybody is talking about her.

"The Big Chance" at the 48th Street Theatre, with Mary Nash as the star, wins out because it is a human and humorous play.

See the part that Fate plays in your life in "Roads of Destiny" at the Republic Theatre. Florence Reed is the star.

Louis Mann and Sam Bernard in "Friendly Enemies" at the Hudson Theatre are the crowning success of the decade.

They love to linger "Up in Mabel's Room" at the Eltinge Theatre. More fun and beauty than any show in town.

Do you know what happens to "The Woman in Room 13" at the Booth Theatre? It's worth finding out.

Have you seen the regeneration of the derelicts in "The Big Chance" at the 48th St. Theatre? Have you laughed and wept with them? Why not?

If you think you can escape Fate, see what happens in "Roads of Destiny" at the Republic Theatre.

All your friends have seen Sam Bernard and Louis Mann in "Friendly Enemies" at the Hudson Theatre. Have you?

—a piece of Fannie Hurst's mind—

Dear Mr. Laemmle:—

I saw "The Heart of Humanity" last night and I want to give you a piece of my mind about it. First, I think it is about the finest achievement the screen has yielded up thus far. Also, aside from the fine moving love story, I learned a vast amount about modern armament.

There is a moment in that picture that is going to thrill down the spinal column of the world. I refer to the dog scene, one of the greatest photoplay moments I have ever enjoyed. A masterpiece! Congratulations!

ANARCHS AND ECSTASY

By JAMES GIBBONS HUNEKER

LEST we forget. While competition is the life of coquettes, the rival opera companies that will fill the air of Gotham with their lyric cries this week offer to the truly musical only the choice between two despairs; with our accustomed happy indecision we prefer Leopold Godowsky to Puccini. We frankly confess our love of symphonic music, and would rather listen to a Beethoven string quartet played by the Flonzaleys than all the operas ever written; the majority of them depicting soul-states in a sanatorium. However, there is the charm of aversion, and that piques the curious. Music in opera is prodigal, never generous. It is the too much that appalls. It is as reticent as a female politician and a hundredfold more attractive. Flying fish, these singing actors. They needs must swim and fly. Winged fish, birds with fins. It is an ambiguous art, the operatic, and it is devised to tickle the ears, dazzle the eyes, of the unmusical and myopic. It breeds personal gossip, never thought. For God's sake, let us sit upon the ground and tell sad stories of Mary Garden's celebrated eyebrows! (This modern instance, for Mary always goes first, as Henry Arthur of the Jones family would say, does not necessitate Shakespearean quotation marks.) Now, having washed our hands of the whole business, we hope to see you tomorrow night at the Lexington Opera House, there to salute Our Mary, and at the Metropolitan Opera House to applaud Caruso and the vocal meteor Rose Ponselle. "Gismonda and the Force of Destiny; or, why there was a hot time in the old town last night," might be an appropriate joint title for pooled operatic issues. Let both companies "amalgamate their sublimes," as Paul Bourget so happily phrases it.

From Bach to Scriabin, have not all composers been anarchs? At first blush the plodding John Sebastian Bach of the Ill-Tempered Clavichord seems a dubious figure with which to drape the red flag of revolt. He grew a forest of children. He taught early and late. He played the organ in church of Sundays. Nevertheless, his music proves him a revolutionist. And, like any good social democrat, he quarreled with his surroundings. He even went out for a drink during a prosy sermon—all sermons are necessarily prosy, else they wouldn't be sermons—and was almost discharged by his superiors for returning late; a perpetual warning to thirsty organists. If Lombroso had been cognizant of this suspicious fact he would have built a terrific structure of degeneration theories with all sorts of inferential subcellars. Stranger still, the music of Bach remains as revolutionary as the hour it was written. No latter-day composer has gone so far as some of his fantasies. Mozart and Gluck depended too much on aristocratic patronage to play the roles of anarchs; yet tales are extant of their refusal to lick the boots of the mighty or curve the spine of the suppliant. Handel! A fighter, a revolutionist born, a hater of tyrants. And the most virile among musicians except the peasant Beethoven—since the recent war become a Belgian composer! His contempt for rank and its entailed snobberies was like a blow from a muscular fist. Haydn need not be considered. He was a henpecked Croatian, and strange stories are related of this merry little blade, truly a chamber-music husband. Mendelssohn was Bach watered down for general consumption. Schubert and Schumann were anarchs, but the supreme anarch of art was Beethoven, who translated into daily practice the radicalism of his music.

Because of its opportunities for the expansion of the soul, music has ever attracted the strong free sons of the earth. It is, par excellence, the art masculine. The profoundest truths, the most blasphemous ideas, may be incorporated within the walls of a symphony, and the police none the wiser. Think of Chopin and Tschaikovsky and the arrant doctrines they preached. It is its freedom from the meddlesome hand of the censor that has made of music a playground for brave hearts. In his "Siegfried" and under the long nose of royalty Richard Wagner drenched anarchy, put into tone, words, gestures, attitudes, lath, plaster, paint, and canvas, pronouncements so terrible that the Old Man of the Mountain, as Bernard Shaw calls Government, if it but knew would forbid his music, not because it was penned by a German, but because it is inimical to tyranny, therefore the most democratic music ever composed. From his point of view I do not wonder at Reginald de Koven's abhorrence of the Kaisermarch, any more than I fail to laud Dean Krehbiel's hatred of Prokofieff's dangerous symphony. Frankly, I sat in fear and trembling at Aeolian Hall and Carnegie Hall when Serge Prokofieff played, momentarily expecting the police to rush upon the stage and seize the musically wicked young Russian—the police and also the Comstockian society. If it needed four plain clothes men to overhear Josef Stransky when he conducted Wagner at a Philharmonic concert, how big an army would it take to suppress Prokofieff? (Cable Premier Paderewski, Warsaw, Poland, for an adequate answer.)

Chopin presents us with a psychic "equivalent of war," as William James has put it, in portions of his music, notably the polonaises; while Richard Strauss has buried more bombs in his work than ever Chopin with his cannon smothered in roses, or Bakounine and his nihilistic prose. Liszt, midway in his mortal life, was bitten by the socialistic theories of Saint-Simon, and, though a silken courtier, he was an innovator in his music. Brahms was a free-thinker and a democrat, but closely hugged the classic line and seldom strayed from the boundaries of his Romantic park. Berlioz, Hector of the Flaming Locks, was, his life long, a fiery individualist. He would have made a picturesque figure waving a blood-red flag on the barricades. His fantastic symphony is charged with the tonal commandments of anarchy. Richard Wagner may not have shouldered a musket during the Dresden uprising of 1849, yet he was, with Roeckel and Bakounine, one of its inspirers. Luckily for us he ran away, else "Tristan" might have remained in the womb of eternal silence. Wagner may be called the Joseph Proudhon among composers; his music is anarchy incarnate, passionately deliberate, like the sad and logical music we find in the great Frenchman's "Philosophy of Misery," (by the way, a subtitle.) His very scheme of harmonization is the symbol of a soul insurgent in the music of Richard Strauss. And what shall we say to the exquisite anarchy of Debussy and Ravel? To the cerebral insurrection of Schoenberg? To the devastating sirocco blasts of Scriabin, Stravinsky, Ornstein, and Prokofieff? The Neo-Scythians, who, like their savage forebears, throw across their saddle bow the helpless diatonic and chromatic scales and bear away their prisoners to their ultimate goal; the unknown land of the sinister Duodecuple scale! Ah! we did not heed years ago the wise words of our critical Nestor, H. E. K., when he said, "'Ware the Muscovite!" (He denies having used this precise phrase. Too late. We have pinned it to paper and it will go marching down the corridor of destiny wearing his label.) Ecco Cossakus! Bad Latin, but reality. The Tartars are coming. Anarcha all.

An ecstasy! It is not an eminently modern quality in the Seven Arts. Sculpture did for a time resist the universal disintegration, this imbroglio of all the arts. Before Rodin no sculptor had so greatly dared to break the line, had dared to shiver the syntax of stone. Sculpture is a static, not a dynamic, art; therefore, let us observe the rules, preserve the chill spirit of the cemetery. What Mallarmé attempted in poetry Rodin accomplished in clay. His marbles do not represent, but present emotion, are the evocation of emotion; as in music, form and substance coalesce. If he does not, as did Mallarmé, arouse "the silent thunder afloat in the leaves," no summons from the vasty deep the spirits of beauty, love, hate, pain, joy, sin, ecstasy above all, ecstasy. The primal and dangerbreeding gift of ecstasy is bestowed upon few. Keats had it, and Shelley; despite his passion, Byron missed it; as did the austere Wordsworth—who had loftier compensations. Swinburne had it from the first. Not Tennyson, and Browning only in occasional exaltation. Like the "cold devils" of Félicien Rops, coiled in frozen ecstasy, the winds of hell booming about them, the poetry of Charles Baudelaire is ecstatic. Poe and Heine knew ecstasy, and Liszt too; but Wagner, ill-tempered like all martyrs, was the master adept of his century. Tschaikovsky closely follows him, and in the tiny piano pieces of Chopin ecstasy is pinioned in a few bars, the soul rapt to heaven in a phrase. Richard Strauss has shown us a variation on the theme: voluptuousness troubled by pain, the soul tortured by the very ecstasy of ecstasy. Like Yeats, he is "Master of the Still Stars and of the Flaming Door." William Blake and his figures rushing down the secret pathway of the mystic, which zigzags from the Fourth Dimension to the bottomless pit of materialism, was a creator of the darker nuances of pain and ecstasy. A sadistic strain, all this.

Scriabin is of this tormented choir; is Arthur B. Davies, our own mystic, primitive painter. And Charles Martin Loeffler. It may be the decadence, as any art is in decadence which stakes the parts against the whole. That ecstasy may be aroused by pictures of love and death, as in the cases of Poe and Baudelaire, Wagner and Strauss, should not therefore be adjudged morbid. In the Far East they hypnotize neophytes with a bit of broken mirror, for in the kingdom of art, as in heaven, there are many mansions. It was possibly a relic of his early admiration for the Baudelaire poems that set Wagner to extorting ecstasy from his orchestra by images of love and death, though doubtless the temperament which seeks assuagement in such a commingiement—a temperament more often encountered in mediaeval art than now—was natural to Wagner. He makes his Isolde sing madly and mournfully over a corpse, and, throwing herself upon the dead Tristan, she dissolves into the ecstasies of sweet, cruel love; in Salome, Richard Strauss closely patterns after Wagner; there is the head of a dead man—though on a charger—and there follows a poignant ecstasy not to be found in all music. Both men play with similar counters: love and death, and death 'mid love. In Pisa may be seen (attributed by Vasari) Orcagna's fresco, "The Triumph of Death." It has been set to grotesque music by Liszt in his "Dance of Death." Let us not forget the great Italian, Gabriele d'Annunzio, whose magnificent prose, from "The Triumph of Death" to "Forsé Che Sì, Forsé Che No," is a paean to the tutelar gods of humanity, love and death. The sting of the flesh and the way of all flesh are interminglied in Rodin's astounding fugue, "The Gate of Hell." First things and Last things, love and life, bitterness and death, have ever ruled the arts; and all great art is anarchic, cosmos and chaos cunningly proportioned.

But between the sublime and the silly there is only a hair's breadth. If not guided by tact and vision, the ecstatic in art and literature may degenerate into the erotic, and from the erotic to the tommyrotic is only a step. All this tumultuous imagery, this rhapsody Hunekeresque, is prompted by a photograph of Mary Garden, whose enigmatic eyes collide with my gaze across the time and space of my writing desk. Slightly to alter Flaubert's sonorous, plastic prose; "Et on fait la guerre avec de la musique, des panaches, des hanches d'or." Your ear is wooed by the golden trumpeta of Byzance in this phrase, and when Mary speaks she wears the sacred Zaimph of Salammbo. Voltaire, in "Candide," was wise when he advised us: "Il faut cultiver notre Jardin." And we shall all go a-gardening this week at the Lexington Avenue Opera House.

Author of "Winged Warfare"
THE WORLD'S GREATEST ACE
Official Record 72 Hun Machines
Will repeat his marvellous story of his thrilling air-fights—some of them 20,000 feet above the earth, at CARNEGIE HALL, FRI. EVE., FEB. 14th, at 8:30

President Hawley of the Aero Club of America, introducing Col. Bishop at his first lecture in America, said: Ladies and Gentlemen:

"It gives me the greatest pleasure to introduce to you the Ace of Aces. A man who has brought down 72 German machines officially and 110 unofficially. A man who represents the highest type of AIR WARRIOR. A man who has received every decoration and distinction that it is possible for his country to bestow.

"THE AERO CLUB OF AMERICA is also proud to have awarded to Colonel Bishop its SPECIAL WAR MEDAL, for having brought down the greatest number of enemy machines destroyed by any of the allied airmen, and for bringing down 5 machines in thirty minutes, a record unparalleled in the annals of air fighting.

"On the morning he received orders to return to England, he went out for one last fling at the enemy, and before he returned he brought down 5 machines. On landing he said 'Goodbye' to his comrades, jumped into his motor car and caught the boat for England.

"He received the Military Cross, Distinguished Service Order, Victoria Cross and many other distinguished decorations for his many exploits, which surpass the wildest flights of the imagination.

"I take the greatest pleasure in introducing Colonel William A. Bishop of the Royal Flying Corps—the world's GREATEST ACE."

WHAT THE NEW YORK PRESS SAID OF THE LECTURE:

NEW YORK HERALD.
Colonel W. A. Bishop, greatest of all aces, held the audience almost breathless with an account of duels in the air almost without end, but there was no mention of the exploit that won for him the Victoria Cross, the most coveted of all decorations in the imperial service. It was the opening of a lecture tour that will cover the entire country.

NEW YORK SUN.
Colonel Bishop entertained an enthusiastic audience with stories of desperate air battles.

NEW YORK TIMES.
A large audience heard Col. William A. Bishop, "Ace of Aces," the Canadian flier, describe his experiences at the front. Colonel Bishop prefaced his talk with a tribute to the American pilots, whom he described as "unsurpassable," and told of the exploits of three Americans who had been members of his squadron.

NEW YORK WORLD.
Colonel Bishop, the Canadian Ace, thrills Lexington Theatre audience with war tales. While his audience gasped in wonderment, the Colonel gave an account of his manoeuvres in the sun, told how he had played leap frog with the clouds and how every twist and turn of his machine meant one more German sent to his death.

TWO NEW FRENCH OPERAS

TWO operas from France new to New York are in the Chicago Opera Association's list for its season that opens tomorrow night at the Lexington. The premier event will be Fevrier's "Gismonda," in the presence of the composer, who assisted in the first performance on any stage recently at Chicago. Next Friday will add Leroux's "Le Chemineau," which Mr. Campanini announced for his farewell matinée in the West yesterday, and which here follows close on Leroux's "Reine Fiametta," by New York's own company.

Henri Fevrier is already known here as composer of "Monna Vanna," in which Mary Garden appeared Feb. 17, 1914, at the Metropolitan, as well as at the Lexington opening last year, and which she will do again next Thursday. The musician himself, on leave from the French Army, passed through New York not long ago on his way to rehearse the new work for its world premiere on Jan. 16.

M. Fevrier was born in Paris in 1874, and studied music at the Conservatoire under Massenet, Faure, and Messager. He has composed three other operas—"Le Roi Aveugle," produced at the Opéra Comique in 1906; "Monna Vanna," first put on at the Paris Opéra and at the Monnaie in Brussels in 1909, and "Carmosine," at the Gaite-Lyrique, Paris, in 1912.

For two years, 1916-17, M. Fevrier was in the French Army, serving at Verdun. He was released to take charge of the Théâtre du Front, at the suggestion of Marshal Pétain. His latest opera, "Gismonda," is based on Sardou's play of that name, known to theatregoers all over the world.

Tiger! Tiger! Cries Gismonda.

Gismonda's heroine, geographically described as "a native of Florence," appears as Duchess of Athens in the year 1450, legding the Greek Court before the Acropolis for a hunt. There is a blessing of the falcons, a discovery by young courtiers of an Oriental tiger, and the incident of a gift of a statue of Aphrodite, goddess of love, at which the Duchess laughs. Conspirators thrust Gismonda's little son into the cistern that holds the tiger. She vows to wed the man who will save him, and when the falconer Almerio claims her word, she repents.

The Duchess finds refuge in a convent of Daphne near Athens; she cannot resign herself to marry a servant. She repulses Zaccaria, a traitor, and as the populace acclaim Almerio, he too arrives to urge his suit. Gismonda feels a strange influence of the man who confesses he has always loved her; she will come secretly in the night to his dwelling if he will forswear her forever after. By night in Almerio's hut, on the Hill of the Nymphs, the Duchess meets her train. The ancient statues descend from their pedestals in a classic dance. The statue of Aphrodite becomes illumined. The villain Zaccaria comes to murder Almerio, but Gismonda strikes him down and embraces the hero.

Palm Sunday, within the Church of Athena, is to witness Almerio's renunciation. Gregoras, one of the conspirators, accusses him of Zaccaria's murder, and Almerio, in order to shield the Duchess, does not deny it. As he is led to prison, she relents, exclaiming, "He will be Duke of Athens," and the play ends in rejoicing.

"The Harvester" as an Opera.

"Le Chemineau," by Xavier Leroux, composer also of "Fiammette," consorts in many ways with that work not heard here. It is from Jean Richepin's story of the open road, known in English as "The Harvester," and memorably acted by Otis Skinner. The opera is said to have been sung in 1911 at New Orleans. The scene is laid in Burgundy.

The Harvester, a beloved vagabond, has compromised Toinette, a village girl, and neither her pleading nor the offer of a rich farmer, Pierre, to set them up in charge of his farm, can keep the man from the life of a rover. He wanders off, and Toinette tries to follow, but is arrested by François, who loves her.

Twenty years after, the son of Toinette and the Harvester, brought up in the home of François, is in love with wealthy Pierre's daughter. Pierre denounces his old neighbors for scheming to give him a "bar sinister" son-in-law. François, ill and out of work, feebly tries to throttle him.

But the Harvester, too, has heard of old friends. Suddenly he returns to find the boy, Toinet, dejected and drinking. Toinette, the mother, comes in search of her son, and the Harvester promises to make old Pierre give up his objections to the match between the lad and his daughter.

Christmas Eve in François's cottage shows Toinet and Aline, happily married, going to the midnight mass. François is failing; he joins old Pierre in urging the Harvester to remain with Toinette when François dies. But the road, highway calls, and the wanderer steps out into the snowy night as Christmas chimes and carols are heard in the distance.

"Le Chemineau's" Composer.

Xavier (Félix Napoléon) Leroux, to give his full name to a Paris composer whose works are new to New York, was born at Vellerot, Italy, Oct. 11, 1863, and studied with Massenet and Dubois at the Paris Conservatoire, where he became professor of harmony. M. Leroux has won prizes as student in counterpoint and in 1887 took the Prix de Rome with a cantata, "Endymion." His first opera was "Evangeline," produced at Brussels in 1895. He wrote "Astarte" for the Paris Opéra in 1900, followed by "La Reine Fiammette," Opéra Comique, 1903; "Venus et Adonis," Nimes, 1905; "William Ratcliff," Nice, 1906, and "Theodora," Monte Carlo, the same year. "Le Chemineau," Paris, 1907; "Le Carilloneur," 1913, and, just before the war, "La Fille de Figaro."

Leroux also has written music to Sardou and Moreau's "Cleopatre," 1890; "Les Perses" of Aeschylus, and "Plutus" of Aristophanes, 1896; Sardou's "Sorcière," 1903, and Richepin's "Nardic," 1910, as well as "La Montagne Enchantée," 1897, in collaboration with Messager.

Born in Cork and taken to France as a child, he has spent most of his life there, and speaks his native tongue with a "brogue" modified by a French accent. His wife, who accompanied him to Chicago, is wholly Parisian, as is their young son, John O'Sullivan, Jr.

METROPOLITAN OPERA.

Charles Hackett, a young American tenor who has made a fine career in Italy and South America, will be heard for the first time in opera in his own country with the Metropolitan company next Friday evening, when he sings Almaviva in the season's first "Barbe of Seville." He was born in Boston and comes of a musical family, his brother being Arthur Hackett, the concert tenor. Charles in his concert days he is Carlo in opera—was solo tenor of St. Thomas's choir here in New York.

Caruso will open the Metropolitan's twelfth week in "La Forza del Destino" for the fifth time tomorrow night, with Ponselle, Gentle, De Luca, Chalmers, and Mardones.

OPERA AT THE PARK.

Three opera companies are singing "Madame Butterfly" this week in New York, the third being a repetition in English, just announced by the Society of American Singers, next Saturday evening at the Park, with Marcella Craft and Orville Harrold. President Hinshaw has also posted a revival of "Robin Hood," which will be his fourteenth production, on Monday evening, Feb. 3.

English "Martha" opens the Park's nineteenth week tomorrow night, with Ruth Miller, Elizabeth Campbell, Craig Campbell, Bertram Peacock, Carl Formes, and others, led by John McGhie.

"Fra Diavolo" is scheduled Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday nights, with Bianca Saroya, Blanche Duffield, Harrold, John Campbell, Watercus, Peacock, Danforth, and Formes.

"The Mikado" occurs again Thursday evening and at Saturday's matinée, with Danforth, Watercus, Jacoby, Allen, Castles, Caldwell, Phillips, Newbold, Truax, and Daly, of the gala cast last October.

Carl Formes and Flotow.

When William Henshaw, President of the American Singers, decided to produce "Martha," Mrs. Mary Werswick, secretary of the society, called his attention to a fact not in the biographical dictionaries—that he had in his company a grandson and namesake of the famous Carl Formes, for whom the bass rôle of Plunkett was written by Flotow.

Carl Formes, the first, sang in the original Vienna production, Nov. 25, 1847, with Anna Zerr and the tenor, Ander. The Carl Formes of today, who as baritone will sing Sir Tristan, recalls that his family came from Spain, and his grandfather at the height of his fame was banished from Austria for complicity in the students' revolution.

In Petrograd he was arrested for saying "History is full of Czars, but there is only one Carl Formes." He found refuge in England, and later in America, dying at San Francisco in 1889. His son, an actor, is in moving pictures in the West. The voice "skipped a generation," and young Carl Formes, with the aid of Mrs. Theodore Thomas, made his début last year in "The Impresario."

OTHERS TO BE HEARD.

Leo Ornstein, the Berkshire Quartet, Clarence Dickinson, and others will give an Aeolian concert next Friday for the Czechoslovak Army.

The University Settlement has opened a series of Sunday talks on music, by D. G. Mason, Kurt Schindler, W. J. Henderson, Arthur Whiting, and David Mannes.

Henry Weldon will sing with Dan Beddoe a program of French duets on Wednesday evening at Columbia University.

Samuel Baldwin has included Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin" in his free organ program at the City College this afternoon.

John Cushing is giving a series of free organ recitals every Monday afternoon at Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church on Fourth Avenue.

Mortimer Wilson is conductor of the All-American Symphony Orchestra, which announces, through Julian Pollak, a season devoted to works by Americans.

BROOKLYN MUSIC.

Sophie Braslau, the Metropolitan contralto, and Efrem Zimbalist, the Russian violinist, will give a joint concert this evening at the Brooklyn Academy.

"Crispino e la Comare" will be sung Tuesday evening at the Academy by Hempel, Braslau, Scotti, Chalmers, De Segurola, and all the Metropolitan cast.

The Philharmonic Orchestra will give on Saturday evening, Feb. 1, the third of four popular concerts at the Brooklyn Commercial High School.

WITH THE NATIONAL BOARD.

INTERESTING questions on the relation of moving pictures to the public were discussed at the annual luncheon of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures at the Hotel McAlpin Saturday a week ago.

The first speaker was Henry E. Jenkins, District Superintendent of Evening Schools in the city, who said in part:

"I wonder if motion picture producers and artists realize what a wonderful effect on general education they have the opportunity to exert through the medium of the motion picture? The whole subject of education is going to be drastically revolutionized. Already, there are indications of this revolution in modern education. The motion pictures will lead it. Put them into the schools as part of the educational process; even though this should temporarily do injury to the business outside, eventually it will stimulate interest in the best productions and attract to them an enlarged audience. First train the youth to know what is beautiful and then you artists will be free, not only from a utilitarian point of view, but artistically free, to accomplish this higher education."

S. L. Rothapfel, who recently resigned as managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres to enter the producing field, said:

"There is a great slogan in the trade, 'Give the public what it wants.' To my mind that is all wrong—it cannot be done. First, because you do not know what the public wants, and, second, because it does not know what it wants itself. Directors of motion pictures are too busy today trying to control the industry. There is not enough idealism—entirely too much commercialism and not enough respect for the intelligence of the audience. I have heard directors say repeatedly: 'Oh, that will go over their heads.' Yet I have seen audiences appreciate the most subtle things. I believe the motion picture will not make great advances until we get more subtlety and idealism into it. I believe that the day is here when the motion picture will be made more subtle and artistic. We must set aside the obvious and use a little more imagination.

"I believe Charlie Chaplin is the greatest artist of our generation. His greatest success is in the practical application of psychology to the motion picture. Directors give too many details on the screen and afford too little opportunity for every one to get by suggestion according to individual capacity the various situations. There are too many pictures today which are nothing but illustrated titles."

Everett Dean Martin of the People's Institute, in speaking of public opinion in its relation to motion pictures, said:

"I am wondering if there is any public in the first place. The word is too often misused. Public opinion is nothing but a lot of private opinions chopped up. We cannot collect private opinions. Public opinion is nothing but what we think other people think we ought to think. It is a way of putting ourselves on parade. But we have a personal self which is not thus hypocritical. We had an idea that people who saw certain situations as questionable in motion pictures were erotic. That was wrong. That was before we knew anything about modern analytical psychology.

"Erotic impulses are never suggested to people from outside. We are the children of a whole generation that has failed to react adequately to this subject. The whole function of dreaming and of art is to express, vicariously and without danger, the suppressed side of our natures, to sublimate this unconsciousness which, turned back on ourselves, makes morbid people of us. The function of art is to sublimate, to recognize eroticisms, to adapt them to higher purposes. True art is essentially ethical. Art should create an imaginary world in which this repressed side of our natures cannot only find expression, but cause it to rise up and be revalued. I am wondering if the time is not coming when leaders will be developed who have a fine sense of artistic responsibility and who will use this instrument of the motion picture to express the artist, philosopher, and saint in every one of us."

Others who spoke were Miss Anita Loos and Dr. Talcott Williams, head of the Columbia School of Journalism. Lester F. Scott presided.

A NEW FILM MAGAZINE.

It is significant of the trend of moving picture development, in one direction at least, that there has appeared this month a new publication entitled The Educational Film Magazine, which is not a trade paper, but is meant for consumption by the general public, or so much of the public as is interested in the educational screen from any point of view. That the publishers, the City News Publishing Company of 33 West Forty-second Street, consider that there is a profitable field for such a periodical is itself an indication of the increasing importance and popularity of educational moving pictures.

An idea of the plan and scope of the magazine may be gained from the following list of articles included in the January number:

"One of the Greatest Things in the World: An Interview with Thomas A. Edison"; "The Art of Picture Making and of Teaching," by Professor Lawrence A. Averill, head of the Department of Child Psychology in the Massachusetts State Normal School; "Synchronizing Films with Textbooks," by Henry MacMahon; "The Church and the Cinema," by the Rev. Dr. Chester C. Marshall, pastor of St. James's Methodist Church, New York; "Speeding Military Training with Films," by Charles F. Carter; "Filming the South Sea Isles," by Martin Johnson; "Fighting Venereal Disease with Films"; "Motion Pictures in Agricultural Education," by Don Carlos Ellis, in charge of Motion Picture Activities for the United States Department of Agriculture.

Dolph Eastman, editor of the magazine, has a leading editorial announcing an ambitious "plan, purpose, and policy."

COMING PHOTOPLAYS.

The Universal Film Company announces the following releases:

Feb. 3, "Sue of the South," produced by W. Eugene Moore, with Edith Roberts; Feb. 10, "The Millionaire Pirate," produced by Rupert Julian, with Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford; "Creaking Stairs," a Universal Special, produced by Mr. Julian, with Mary MacLaren; Feb. 17, "The Sealed Envelope," directed by Douglas Gerrard, with Fritzie Brunette; Feb. 24, "The Rose of the Night," a Universal Special, produced by Tod Browning, with Priscilla Dean; "The Little White Savage," produced by Paul Powell, with Carmel Myers.

The Fox Film Company's scheduled releases for February are:

R. A. Walsh's "Every Mother's Son"; "The Man Hunter," with William Farnum; "Luck and Pluck," with George Walsh; "Hell Roarin' Reform," with Tom Mix; "The Love Auction," with Virginia Pearson; "Smiles," with Jane and Katherine Lee, and four revised reissues, "Infidelity," "The Soul of Broadway," with Valeska Suratt; "The Darling of Paris," with Theda Bara, and "Hoodman Blind," with William Farnum.

Vitagraph releases are:

Feb. 3, "The Highest Trump," with Earle Williams; Feb. 10, "Fortune's Child," with Gladys Leslie; Feb. 17, "Silent Strength," with Harry T. Morey; Feb. 24, "The Lion and the Mouse," with Alice Joyce.

"A Man in the Open," with Dustin Farnum, will be released Feb. 16 by the United Picture Theatres, Inc.

PROHIBITION AND FILMS.

MANY persons are discussing today the probable effect of national prohibition upon moving pictures and the subject has divided itself into two parts, one concerning the effect upon theatres and the other concerning changes to come in photoplays.

It seems to be agreed that prohibition will help the moving-picture theatres. It is argued that when the handy saloon has passed out of existence men will go to "the movies" more and take their families with them. In support of this contention cases of the growth of theatres in number and attendance in dry territories are cited. Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Company, recalls, for example, that when Illinois was in the process of going dry ten years ago he wrote to every saloon keeper in the State advising him to turn his saloon into a motion-picture theatre, with the result that more than 200 took his advice to their own profit and his.

Mr. Laemmle also supplies what seems to be the general opinion of the effect of prohibition on photoplays. He says:

"Screen and stage will both be compelled to discard the saloon, the private cellarette, the aristocratic buffet and all other liquor-dispensing institutions and devices, public or private, as incidents in the development of plots. No longer will it be possible for the scenarist or playwright to send his hero for consolation to the cup that cheers. No longer will the plot-maker be able to steel the nerves of his desperate villain by plying him with drink. No longer will dark conspiracies be hatched round the tables of drink emporiums. John Barleycorn has been a good friend to the writer of plays and scenarios. He has helped them out of many a difficulty. And now—John Barleycorn is dead. He will serve no more.

"A play or a photodrama depending even slightly upon the liquor crutch for scene or incident will be, in a few months, passé. The critical, observing it, will immediately label it as a play of yesterday. It will bear a date tag reading, 'Prior to July, 1919.' It will not be a play or a photodrama of today—of the new today. It will be a production of the past—of a bygone era. It will be what the critics call 'historical,' in the same class with 'costume' plays.

"Attention of all Universal scenarists and directors has been called to these facts. Because of them we have already pigeonholed some good scenarios. It can't be helped. The new day brings its new order, and we must labor accordingly."

IN THE NEWS NET.

LAST week's report from Los Angeles to the effect that the World Film Corporation, United Picture Theatres of America, and the Peerless Producing Company had formed an organization for the production and distribution of photoplays is now supplemented by a statement from J. A. Berst, President of United, giving some of the details of the new arrangement. United will take over and enlarge the Peerless studio at Fort Lee and make "super-features" there to be distributed by the World Film Company. According to Mr. Berst, more than 1,300 theatres in every important city and town in the country are already enrolled as members of the United corporation, and this number of subscribers will be increased, it is expected, through the advantages of the new combination.

Another announcement from the producing field is from William L. Sherrill, President of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, who says that beginning March 1 next his company will manufacture and release, at the rate of one every two weeks, a series of two-reel Western photoplays. A feature of the productions will be that a woman, Miss Texas Guinan, will be the star in them. In making the announcement Mr. Sherrill affirms his belief that there is a great opportunity for short subjects of the kind contemplated.

It is reported that John W. Slayton, a Socialist and trade unionist of Pittsburgh, has obtained financial and moral support from labor unions and individuals in Pittsburgh, New York, Wheeling, Harrisburg, Cleveland, Erie, and other places for the production of "The Contrast," a photoplay written by him and dealing with labor from the point of view of the trade unionist. So far, it is said, Mr. Slayton has raised $16,000 of the $50,000 desired for the production.

"The Inner Circle," by Wallace Clifton, will be the seventh photoplay of the series to be produced by the Stage Women's War Relief for the purpose of raising money with which to erect and maintain a theatre for wounded soldiers at the Grand Central Palace Debarkation Hospital. "A Bit of Love," by Rachael Crothers, with Mabel Tallaferro and Robert Edeson in the leading rôles, the sixth of the series, is now being cut and edited at the Estee studios. The first film will be released in the near future through the Universal exchanges.

The recently organized Selznick Pictures Corporation announces that it has closed a contract with Cosmo Hamilton by which Mr. Hamilton will supply the company with at least three original scenarios in 1919. Work on the company's first picture, "Upstairs and Down," with Olive Thomas in the leading rôle, has been begun at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles and the photoplay, it is expected, will be ready for release in March. It is the intention of the company to have one production ready for release every six weeks thereafter.

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, has signed a contract for the exclusive showing of a series of sixteen Prizma color pictures, in addition to the four shown at the Rivoli in the last month.

Eve Unsell, the scenario writer, will address the Cinema Composers at Columbia University on Friday evening.

Maurice A. Kashin, managing director of the Broadway and Symphony Theatres, who has been ill with influenza for the last two weeks, has returned to his office at the theatre.

"Break the News to Mother," with which B. S. Moss returns to producing, is being made at the Norma Talmadge Studios in East Forty-eighth Street. Julius Steger is directing the production and Pearl Shepard has the leading rôle.

"Twilight," with Doris Kenyon in the leading rôle and of which J. Searle Dawley was the director, has been completed and will soon be released by De Luxe Pictures, Inc. The photoplay was based upon Vingie E. Roe's story, "The Alchemy of Love," in the Metropolitan Magazine.

Niles Welch, who supported Norma Talmadge in "The Secret of the Storm Country" and Marguerite Clark in "Little Miss George Washington," is playing opposite Enid Bennett in a picture now being made at the studio of Thomas H. Ince in Culver City.

Apparently Florida is beginning to offer inducements against those of California as a moving-picture production centre. The latest company to go South, according to report, is Theda Bara's, which is at work under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards at Miami. There are two other Fox companies at Miami, those headed by William Farnum and George Walsh.

Alfred Allen, a Universal player, is reported to be in danger of losing the sight of his right eye owing to a wound received from the wad of a blank cartridge fired during the making of one of the scenes in "The Red Glove," a serial.

Jane Novak, formerly leading woman for William S. Hart and Charles Ray, will play opposite Rupert Julian in Universal's "The Fire Flingers," an adaptation of W. J. Neidig's story in The Saturday Evening Post.

WITH THE ORCHESTRAS

PLANS for a Victory festival to engage 400 musicians have been formulated by the Symphony and Oratorio Societies, which will combine in performances on March 13 and 15 of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with its choral finale "typifying the brotherhood of man and the world millennium." The full program includes three events, beginning March 7 with an evening of elaborate choral prelude. Festival features will be the duet for basses, "The Lord Is a Man of War," from Handel's "Israel in Egypt," sung by the entire male chorus of the Oratorio Society; Miriam's Song of Triumph from the same oratorio, with its double chorus, "The Horse and His Rider Has He Thrown Into the Sea"; a memorable "Holy, Holy" from the Manila Te Deum, composed by Walter Damrosch in 1890 in honor of Admiral Dewey's victory, and Handel's "See, the Conquering Hero Comes," from "Judas Maccabaeus."

Boston's Beethoven and Brahms.

At the next Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall, on Thursday evening, Feb. 6, Mr. Rabaud will conduct Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, as already he has the "Eroica" and the Eighth. An interesting revival will be four orchestral movements which Cesar Franck arranged from his choral symphonic poem, "Psyché." The other two numbers are Chabrier's prelude to the second act of his opera, "Gwendoline," and Lalo's rhapsody on Norwegian themes.

The program for Saturday afternoon, Feb. 8, is headed by Brahms's symphony No. 2, in D major. The second part will again be from the French, including incidental music which Fauré wrote for Harancourt's "Shylock," and, of familiar things, Saint-Saëns's "Phaëton" and Berlioz's "Roman Carnival."

Russians and Rachmaninoff.

Modest Altschuler, conductor of the Russian Symphony Society, will have as guest for his next pair of concerts at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, Jan. 28, and Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 29, the eminent Russian composer-pianist, Sergei Rachmaninoff, whose piano recital a fortnight since was an event of the season in New York. Mr. Rachmaninoff, who shares with Glazunoff, now that the veteran Rimsky-Korsakoff is dead, the honor of upholding the traditions of the young Russian school, will on this occasion play from manuscript a completely revised version of his first pianoforte concerto. Changes made in the score are so numerous as to entitle it to the name of a novelty, in the estimation of those interested in the larger works of the pianoforte repertory.

Damrosch Speaks for Wagner.

New York's orchestras for more than a year have found that Wagner programs, whenever and wherever played, have packed the halls, until of late it appeared that an agitation was making to enforce prohibition upon those who cherished a thirst for the brew of Bairuth. Police were called within the last ten days to preserve the peace of the Philharmonic, at Carnegie Hall, and public protest was last week attempted in the case of another concert, led by a Japanese. Next Thursday and Saturday it will be the Symphony Society's turn.

For the present, says an official note, Mr. Damrosch will not play works by any living German composer, nor is the German language sung at any of his concerts. But he considers Wagner a genius, one who not only wrote his principal works as a political exile in Switzerland, but whose music has become a world heritage. He, therefore, holds that certain instrumental excerpts from the Wagnerian music dramas may properly be played at this time. . . .

Plans of Musicians.

Emilio de Gogorza will give his postponed song recital in Aeolian Hall on Sunday afternoon, March 2.

Guiomar Novaes has reannounced her benefit for the Paris Conservatoire, which she will now give on Feb. 19.

Jascha Heifetz will next appear at Carnegie Hall on Feb. 9, for which the tickets are those of his canceled recital of New Year's Day.

Lambert Murphy and John Powell are two recital givers in Aeolian Hall on Monday of next week, Feb. 3.

Margaret Tilly is a new pianist scheduled to appear Feb. 18 in the Aeolian calendar.

MacDowell Symphony Club.

The MacDowell Symphony Club, organized under the leadership of Max Jacobs last season, has lately resumed its rehearsals, to be held every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock at the Yorkville Casino, where those interested may apply. Both men and women, professional and non-professional players, are eligible, and over 100 members are said to have gained experience already in this way, some having been engaged to play with regular orchestras this year.

America's Army Bands.

A recent concert in Aeolian Hall by one of America's new army bands from Governors Island, under the leadership of Captain Arthur A. Clappe, Director of the Army Music Training School, is yet significant, it is said, as "the first occasion on which the newly authorized official instrumentation of the increased army bands was heard in a concert program."

This new formation combines features of the large French, English, and Italian military bands and aims at surrounding the inevitable brass with the "more emotionally expressive" reeds and woodwinds, a quartet of "double reeds," quartet of saxophones, quartet of alto and bass clarinets, one sarrusophone, and the "usual" flutes.

Members of the versatile band, over fifty strong, likewise sang under the baton of Lieutenant William C. White, assistant director of the school, the four choral numbers, including two negro spirituals, recorded at Hampton, Va., by Natalie Curtis Burlin.

Caruso, Prize Giver.

Signor Caruso's prize of a diamond pin at the Neapolitan song contest held recently in Carnegie Hall, where Caruso, Scotti, and Amato were judges for Alfredo Salmaggi, has been awarded to a song by E. Castelucci, sung by Adele Manna, who also sang the air by A. S. Ruffo that won Scotti's gold watch. Amato's gold cigarette box was won by R. Nicosia, and Papi's gold medal by G. Podenzana, both of their songs being sung by Emilia Vergera. There were eight silver medals among a dozen awards of prizes practically for all.

Slovenian Singers Here.

Referring to a recent festival by allied Jugoslav choruses here in New York, a correspondent calls attention to the fact that the Slovenians, who were "the only active participants" in the concert at Aeolian Hall in September, were curiously omitted in the reports of that day. Joseph Rems, Chairman of the local committee of the Jugoslav Singing Union, now writes: "We, of course, gladly admit that the Croatians, Montenegrins, and Serbians are our brothers of related nations, so-called Jugoslavs; but in this case they did not co-operate with us, having been prevented by various difficulties." Which recalls that "when Greek meets Greek" then comes the tug of war.

Grieg's Songs in Norwegian.

That "about 149 songs," or any other number of Grieg's less-known lyrics, have "seldom been sung, and never in America," is one of those assertions that would be important if true. Yet New York hears many songs in a year. A recital of these supposed "unknown masterpieces" was held here recently by one who had lived in Norway and is said to have given much study to the master-songs of Grieg. As she observed, "The songs of Grieg that have been sung here in the past have usually been given in German." Miss Gardini sang them in their native Norse. Her encores were in English, which was the language of Grieg's own Scotch grandfather, by the way.

February Music Fixtures.

Helene Romanoff, a soprano of the Petrograd opera, will make her début in song recital at Aeolian Hall on Feb. 3.

Sophie Braslau and Raoul Vidas will appear Feb. 3 at the Waldorf-Astoria for the milk stations of the Diet Kitchen Association.

Hulda Lashanska on Feb. 4, Heifetz on Feb. 9, and Frieda Hempel Feb. 18 are among coming events at Carnegie Hall.

Eva Gauthier and Sascha Votichenko will give an unusual program with the Russian Symphony on Feb. 23 at Maxine Elliott's Theatre.

Felix Garzigilo, a French pianist, will give his second Aeolian recital on Saturday evening, Feb. 8.

Carved in Algerian Rocks.

A huge buffalo with enormous horns is conspicuous in prehistoric rock drawings lately found in Algeria. The African elephant is also a striking feature, and other animals include the lion, leopard, gazelle, and domestic goats and sheep.—San Francisco Argonaut.

LATEST MOTOR CARS IN BIG AUTO SHOW

Over Fifty-eight Makes of Vehicles Will Be Seen in Annual Exhibit Opening Saturday Night

Everything is ready for New York's nineteenth annual automobile show which will be opened on Saturday night at 8 o'clock in Madison Square Garden and the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, on Lexington Avenue, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Streets, close to the Garden. With every inch of available exhibition space taken in both of the large buildings and with fifty-eight different makes of passenger cars and chasses to be shown, this year's show, following so closely after the trying war period which restricted production at the factories to a minimum, is assured of a success that will equal, if indeed, it may not exceed, all of the former noteworthy national motor car exhibits in this city.

The show this year will continue for two weeks, the first week being devoted to passenger cars and accessories, while the second week, beginning Monday, Feb. 10, will be the first distinctive exhibit ever held here of motor trucks and smaller commercial vehicles.

Including the great variety of accessories, there will be about 200 exhibitors during the first week of the show. Despite the curtailment of factory output during the war, several new models of popular cars will be shown and one brand new make of a moderate-priced car. Visitors, therefore, will find sufficient novel and interesting features illustrative of the stabilizing of the American motor car industry in spite of the hardships entailed during the war, all of which were cheerfully met by the manufacturers and dealers as a prime necessity to win the war.

The exhibit of motor cars will include several electrics, in addition to all the well-known makes of gasoline vehicles. Everything will be shown, from the small, light, low-priced car class to the most expensive vehicle on wheels. Featured with many of the cars will be new body designs, many custom made, which are being offered by a number of the leading dealers, while the regular standard bodies will reveal new lines. The body display will be one of the most interesting features. The popularity of the inclosed car for all-year use is undisputed, and the great majority of makers will show models of that type. Limousines, phaetons, coupés, Berlines, Sedans, and landaulets will be seen in all their beauty and attractiveness, while the touring cars and roadsters will appeal to those who favor open-air touring. There will be many convertible body types, permitting a closed car in Winter and an open one in warm weather.

While the car display is the principal attraction, the accessory exhibit will be equally attractive, for thousands of visitors will be motorists who are not desirous of purchasing new cars, but are eager to see the improvements adaptable to their particular cars. Hundreds of makes of accessories, parts and sundries will be offered by more than 150 manufacturers and selling organizations. Included in this list are the leading makers of the Motor Accessory Manufacturers' Association.

Among the more recent accessories will be condensers for the cooling system. A few years ago some of the English racing cars adopted these devices, and the idea was applied to certain passenger cars. The condenser in the form of a spiral tube winding above the radiator throat is said to be especially desirable in cold weather when alcohol in the water, to prevent freezing, is vaporized by the heat of the engine. This vapor finds its way through the coils of the condenser, and this being exposed to cold air causes the vapor to condense and flow back into the cooling system to mix with the water. This preserves the alcohol. Such novelties as a device which indicates at a glance the amount of water in the radiator without removing the cap to investigate, will be among the new things.

There will also be a varied line of automobile locks, some being very ingenious devices to prevent theft. Some are worked with a key and others have a combination lock similar to a safe combination.

Garage and repair men will find much that is interesting in modern and improved equipment for garage use. New methods of handling gasoline, new types of air compressors, battery charging systems, improved sorts of meters and heating systems will be found.

Many of the standard accessories will reveal the direct influence of use in warfare. Many forms of construction which are sufficiently strong for civil use were found too light for the severe usage in the war zone. It meant redesigning in many factories to meet army and navy specifications.

Accessories and parts will be exhibited in both the Garden and the armory. The balconies and basement will be devoted to accessories in the Garden.

The exhibit of passengers during the first week will be grouped as follows:

Madison Square Garden, Main Arena: Buick, Cadillac, Chandler, Daniels, Dodge Brothers, Haynes, Locomobile, Marmon, Maxwell, Mitchell Moon, National, Oakland, Oldsmobile, Overland, Packard, Peerless, Pierce-Arrow, Stearns, Studebaker, Stutz, Willys-Knight, Winton.

Exhibition Hall, on the main floor, adjoining foyer: Auburn, Baker R. & L., Cole, Dort, Mercer, Reo, Scripps-Booth, Velie.

Concert Hall, second floor: Essex, Hudson.

Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, Twenty-sixth Street and Lexington Avenue: Apperson, Buick, Chalmers, Crow-Elkhart, Cunningham, Davis, Elgin, Empire, Franklin, Hupmobile, Jordan, King, Kissel, Lexington, Liberty, McFarlan, Nash, Owen-Magnetic, Paige, Phianna, Premier, Roamer, Saxon, Standard, Westcott.

In the armory will also be shown several Liberty motors and a variety of body designs.

This year's exhibit is held under the auspices of the Automobile Dealers' Association of New York. The Show Committee is composed of Charles H. Larson, Chairman; H. R. Bliss, Harry J. De Bear, R. J. Gilmore, William C. Poertner, Walter A. Woods, and Charles A. Stewart, manager.

A single fifty-cent admission ticket will be good for admission to both the Garden and armory during the passenger car display and visitors may visit one building one day and the other on a following day if they so desire. The same arrangement will also prevail for the commercial vehicle show during the second week.

CONVICTS AS ROAD WORKERS

Show Good Results in Many States —Only Two Efforts to Escape.

Convict labor for highway construction and maintenance has been employed very generally by many States during the last year. Reports recently received by the Lincoln Highway Association at Detroit indicate that this method of construction has been an unqualified success in every instance, the work proving not only of value to the State, but of benefit to the convicts.

New Jersey worked several gangs of convicts for long periods in the construction of concrete sections of the Lincoln Highway during 1918, and this form of labor was also utilized to a greater or less extent in Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, and California. Ohio made use of a number of boys from the Ohio State Reformatory in the construction of a brick section of the Lincoln Highway, near Mansfield. Nearly a hundred State convicts were used on concrete construction near Shingle Springs, Cal., and from forty-five to sixty-five were kept constantly on the job, financed by the Lincoln Highway Association, in Fisher Pass, Tooele County, Utah, from June to November.

A small gang of Nevada State convicts accomplished excellent work in King's Canyon, on the Lincoln Highway, near the Nevada-California line. It is evident that this form of labor will be utilized to an even greater extent in the future upon projects of State importance. There has been no protest from organized labor in connection with this form of work for State prisoners.

In every State the men work under the surveillance of guards, although the latter are seldom needed strictly as guards, for the men like to get into the open air, and rarely does one of them make an attempt to break for liberty. The guards are told by the road foreman just what work is to be done, and with this information in hand, they serve as foremen over the men. Only two convicts of the number employed between New York and San Francisco in the States enumerated, upon Lincoln Way construction work during 1918, made an attempt to escape. These two men escaped from the gang at work on the Fisher Pass section in Utah, but were soon recaptured.

Ever Kick a Battery to Pieces?

Of course you wouldn't do it intentionally.
No good driver would.
But a lot of experienced drivers of trucks and passenger cars have kicked their batteries to pieces without even knowing it by banging on the starting button when the motor didn't take hold at once.
Perhaps the trouble was just thick oil.
Maybe water had accumulated in the carburetor.
Possibly a connection had worked loose.
But whatever it was the battery had to suffer.
You can get far longer life from your battery, and incidentally from your whole car if you'll always be sure where the trouble is and correct it just as soon as you locate it.

We test, repair and recharge storage batteries, and always carry a full supply of battery parts, new batteries and rental batteries.

BOSCH

I AM AN AMERICAN!

(On December 7, 1918, the Alien Property Custodian of the United States sold the entire holdings of the Bosch Magneto Company which have been taken over by an American Manufacturing Corporation. The Personnel was submitted to the Custodian before sale)

THE history of the development of the Internal Combustion Motor is the history of Bosch Ignition. The Bosch is now an American Institution which will necessarily maintain the same scrupulous care in the purchase of materials, the same exact precision which has marked its every manufacturing process and the same exhaustive laboratory and field experimentation which has kept Bosch Ignition in step, without interruption, stride for stride with the motor progress of the world.

There has never been any manufactured article whose reputation for satisfactory performance has been better than the Bosch.

After America entered the war, thousands of Bosch Magnetos —85% of the entire output of the great Bosch works at Springfield—went into vital war service on army trucks, tractors, airplanes, motorcycles, etc.

Bosch now is new only in ownership—it comprises the same active heads that administered the company under the Alien Property Custodian during the war. The Bosch Organization, which from the first has dominated the field of ignition, enters upon a new era of service to American Industry. Motor triumphs of the future, as of the past, will be built on the firm foundation of Bosch Ignition.

ELECTRIC intake heater $35.00

Guaranteed to give satisfaction or money refunded. We refer you to any bank in Jackson.

The Electric Intake Heater consists of a quick-action electric resistance coil (the same principle as an electric flat iron).

It attaches easily and simply to the intake pipe, manifold or carburetor of any make of car, without drilling, taping or alteration.

The heater does not run down the battery, even when used a dozen times a day. It consumes for a minute or so at a time, only as much current as your lights.

In ordering, be sure to give the make and model of your car, the battery voltage and whether the wiring is double or single.

GOOD MOTOR ADVICE FOR WEAK BATTERY

Electric System Will Give Warning of Approaching Trouble—Simple Methods for Recharging

By WILLIAM H. STEWART, JR.
President of the Stewart Automobile School.

When your electrical system fails to charge the battery your engine will begin to miss explosions and shortly after will refuse to run. Before this occurs, however, there will be plenty of warning. The lights will go down more than usual when the starter is used. They will brighten when you speed up the engine and grow dim when you slow down. These signs point to a weak battery. If observant you will have noticed that the ammeter registered a low charging rate. This indicates that the generator is not charging as it should. But the fault may be in the driver and not in the generator at all. If the starter or the lights are used too much the current will be drawn from the battery faster than it is being charged. So note that your battery gets the proper balance. If the car is run much at night the battery may not receive enough current. Run the engine more during the daytime, so as to replace the current that has been drawn from it.

If the charging system has failed, due to some defect, have it attended to at a service station, and have the battery charged immediately. Some owners prefer to recharge their own batteries from the lighting system in the house. This is a practical method and one that will grow, especially where service stations are not available.

Special apparatus is required, but it is not expensive. It may be connected to any lamp socket using 110-volt current. This may be direct or alternating, the apparatus differing according to which current is used. For direct current a rheostat is employed, which brings the current down to the right amperage, usually ten amperes for the average battery used on a starting and lighting system.

For alternating current a rectifier must be used to give direct current and to give the right amperage. The positive of the battery must be connected to the positive lead from the apparatus and the negative of the battery to the negative lead. This runs the charging current into the positive of the battery, reversing the chemical composition of the plates. Then, when the change is complete, charging is stopped and the current may be drawn from the positive in the usual manner.

Before charging see that the electrolyte covers the plates. Nothing but distilled water should ever be added for this purpose, and then only after the battery is charged. The electrolyte should cover the plates at least a quarter of an inch at all times. Having inspected and corrected this condition, the filling caps should be removed to allow the gas to escape. Then adjust the amperage according to the capacity of the battery. A discharged battery should start charging at one-tenth capacity. Thus a 100 ampere-hour battery should start at 10 amperes, a 60 ampere-hour at 6 amperes.

In an hour or so the hydrogen gas will start to come off very freely. This is known as gasing or boiling. When it gases freely, diminish the charging rate one of two amperes. The battery will be fully charged when the electrolyte reads 1,275 to 1,300 on the hydrometer. This will take about ten hours. The voltmeter reading will be about 7 volts, but the hydrometer test is more satisfactory. If the voltmeter reads 7 volts, but the electrolyte is low, it shows some acid has been spilled. This should be replaced, but only enough to bring the electrolyte to 1 300.

Even though an operator does not intend to charge his battery off the car, he should understand the process, since it will enable him to take better care of the battery in service.

ITALIAN MOTOR OUTPUT.

Over 50,000 Cars Built for Army Use During War Period.

The Fiat Company of Italy, which kept its plant in complete operation during the war to supply necessary means of transportation to the Italian and allied armies, has issued an interesting statement of the actual number of cars and lorries supplied for army use. In 1914, Italy then being neutral, not more than 500 motor vehicles were supplied for the army. Between Jan. 1, 1915, and Oct. 30, 1918, the number of cars and lorries built for the allied armies totaled 50,000. Of this number, 30,000 went to the Italian Army, 15,000 to the French Army, and 5,000 were divided among the American, British, and Portuguese armies.

The record monthly output was 2,023 during October, 1917, this being an average of seventy-five motor vehicles per working day. This daily record was considerably exceeded later, when, the Italian Government having requested the factories to speed up to their utmost limits, in order to make good the material lost in the Caporetto disaster, the Fiat factory turned out 176 motor vehicles, the majority being lorries, during the working hours of Dec. 31, 1917. It is believed that this is the largest number of vehicles produced by any European factory in one day. This record output was attained without interfering with the normal production of airplanes and airplane engines.

As an indication of the importance which the Italian Command attached to motor transportation, it is permitted to state that it was decided by General Diaz, immediately after the Caporetto defeat, to create a reserve of several thousand motor vehicles in order, when the next attack was launched, to be able to move his entire force by motor trucks into Austria. It was realized that when another attack was made the Italian Army would be unable to count on the use of any railroads once enemy territory was entered.

It is not known whether the great reserve fleet of lorries was actually secured, but in any case General Diaz considered, in less than twelve months after the greatest defeat the Allies had suffered, that his forces were prepared to begin a movement which depended extensively on motor vhicles for its success, and which fortunately proved to be a victory all along the line.

ROAD CONVENTION HERE.

Will Discuss National Highway Problems at Hotel McAlpin.

The ninth American Good Roads Congress and the sixteenth annual convention of the American Road Builders' Association will be held at the Hotel McAlpin on Feb. 25 to 28.

Many problems of importance are at the present time confronting the road builders of the country. It is proposed to bring together those most prominently identified with highway construction, transportation, and maintenance to discuss these vital questions.

The program will be devoted to the consideration of highway transportation and the administration, financing, construction, and maintenance of national, State, county, and municipal highways. Papers by prominent highway authorities will be presented for discussion. The general plan contemplates devoting Feb. 25 and 26 to the presentation and discussion of papers, and Feb. 27 and 28 for the consideration of reports to be submitted by several committees. The business session of the association will be held on the afternoon of Feb. 28.

Next year it is proposed to hold in connection with the convention a comprehensive exhibit of road machinery, equipment, and materials.

Engineers to Discuss Auto Topics.

The automobile session during the annual meeting of the Society of Automotive Engineers, to be held in the Engineers' Society Building during the show week, will be on Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 5.

Henry M. Crane, Howard Marmon and O. E. Hunt will discuss the probable effect of aeronautic experience on automobile practice. D. McCall White will talk on high efficiency automobile engines, and J. G. Utz will present a paper giving the story of the development of the United States standard military truck. Mr. Utz was for several months in charge of the Motor Transport Engineering Office of the Quartermaster's Corps, and had opportunities to observe the performance of trucks at the front.

SUCCESS IN SNOW REMOVAL.

Highways Transport Committee Cooperating with State Officials.

Snow removal from the highways of many States, to expedite motor truck transportation, has been conducted with considerable success this season under the auspices of the Highways Transport Committee of the Council of National Defense, in co-operation with the various State and county officials. Fortunately, this Winter has been less severe than a year ago, when the lack of proper snow removal in many parts of the country entailed serious delays in the prompt arrival to the seaboard of army motor transport trains.

John S. Cravens, Chairman of the Highways Transport Committee, calls attention to the fact that in New Jersey the first fall of snow was effectively handled in the ten of counties comprising the northern part of the State. In Pennsylvania, New York, Michigan, Ohio, and some others, where the Legislatures have made possible working machinery for grappling with the snow removal situation, co-operation has been possible with good results.

Sketching the post-war program, Mr. Cravens cites the efforts being made to obtain legislation affecting highways transport in uniform State traffic laws and police traffic regulations; stimulation of food production, calling for cooperation with the Bureau of Markets and other agencies interested in the distribution of food; a survey of facilities available for highways transportation, and city marketing facilities; transportation facilities for soldier farms, embracing State or national movements to open up settlements of large tracts of ground as yet unproductive; transportation facilities for developing resources other than agricultural, &c.; co-operation with railroads and waterways, taking in feeder extensions; co-ordination of highways transport to facilitate collection and delivery of freight and express for rail and electric lines; standardization of methods of shipping by highways transport; placing of returned soldiers experienced in highways transport, including operators, mechanics, and executives, and State committee activity with respect to highway development.

The desire of the Highways Transport Committees throughout the country is to work to the end and that they may be of direct benefit to the State.

Newark Auto Show Plans.

White Mountain Highway.

Advocates of good roads in New Hampshire are taking steps to improve a thoroughfare to be known as the White Mountain Highway, winding through the mountains of that name in the State. At a recent meeting the New Hampshire Manufacturers' Association went on record as favoring the improvement of the highway to be eventually a part of a national highway system, with the idea of giving New Hampshire the same prominence in respect to its connection with such a road as enjoyed by the States crossed by the Lincoln Highway.

An innovation at this year's Auto Show will be the participation by the General Motors Export Company, an organization interested in the marketing of motor cars overseas. A booth has been taken at Madison Square Garden, where a complete line of export models of the passenger cars and trucks which it markets will be shown.

W. R. Vogeler has been appointed general manager of the King Car Corporation of New York, to take the place of E. A. Schen, who has gone to Detroit as general sales manager of the company at the factory.

The new automobile plant started by the Studebaker Corporation at South Bend in 1916 will be completed Jan. 1, 1920. Considerable progress in the construction of the new plant was accomplished in the execution of orders for military supplies for the Government. The new plant will have a capacity of 100,000 cars per annum, which, with the facilities of the Detroit plants of 80,000 cars per annum, will double the capacity of the corporation.

On Dec. 7, 1918, the Alien Property Custodian, sold the entire property and patent rights of the Bosch Magneto Company. The buyers, organized as the American Bosch Magneto Corporation, has the following officers: A. T. Murray, President; George A. MacDonald, Vice President and Treasurer; A. H. B. Altree and Leon W. Rosenthal, Vice Presidents; J. A. MacMartin, Secretary. Mr. Murray is also President of the Bethlehem Motors Corporation of Allentown, Penn.

Louis Rosenberg is advertising manager of the Keystone Tire and Rubber Company, which is doing a business of $9,000,000 a year.

"Profitable Farm Hauling with Motor Trucks" is the title of a booklet just issued by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio. Interesting figures are shown outlining comparisons of wagon costs with motor truck costs as compiled by the United State Department of Agriculture. Copies of the booklet are free.

SUPER-SIZE CORDS FOR HEAVY CARS

UNTIL recently over 90% of STERLING Tires have been used on commercial cars and trucks where loads are greatest and usage hardest.

They are built to withstand such conditions. Hundreds of commercial concerns--some of them running fleets of several hundred cars have told us that their own accurately kept cost records show STERLING'S lower in cost-per-mile than tires previously used.

During the past twelve months we have developed and perfected the STERLING SUPER-SIZE CORD--air-bag cured, which we expect to exceed all previous mileage records.

We claim nothing mysterious or miraculous for STERLINGS. We offer them simply as sturdy, honest, dependable tires--neither highest nor lowest in price--built as eleven years' experience has taught us, from materials which time and test have proven best for strength and durability.

STERLING Tires are guaranteed 5,000 miles (6,000 in 30x3½ and 31x4) and average very much more. They are repaired free of charge at any of our thirty-six factory sales branches as long as, in our judgment, the condition of the tire justifies the repair.

Any good dealer will get them for you, or they may be had from our branches.

ACROSS SIBERIA FROM VLADIVOSTOK

one called to us in English, recognizing us as Americans by our uniforms: "She's a fine-looking girl, isn't she?"

We looked around to see a young man pointing to a Russian girl conversing with the station master.

"Where did you come from?" That is our invariable reply to such greetings.

"Oh, I've been in Canada and New York seven years," was the young man's answer.

At another small village near Lake Baikal a girl came to the train, saying: "You Americans?" To the reply of one of the doctors that we were, she said: "I been in New York in milliner shop."

A few experiences such as these soon convince one that Siberia is not so far from the United States as many of us have imagined. I was walking through the railroad yards of Sema one afternoon when I spied some German war prisoners in a box car. Climbing in, I found seven Germans and Austrians, the tailors and shoemakers for a company of Cossacks.

"I have been seven years in Reading, Penn," said one of the men "I have a brother there. Mathias Simon, but I haven't heard from him in thirteen months."

"Are you married?" I asked.

"Yes, I have a wife and baby in Budapest."

"Do you know that Austria has made a separate peace?"

"No?" he inquired, doubting and astonished. "Then why don't they let us go home?"

With these words he echoed the wish of every war prisoner in Siberia. I have met many hundreds of them in all parts of the country, and their only question has been: "When do you think we can go home?" To some of them I have spoken about the war, asking:

"Well, when you do get back will you be ready again for another war?"

Their answers have been a chorus of "Never again, if we have anything to say about it." In this respect Siberia has been a great pacifier.

SMUGGLERS BUSY.

From Manchuria City we moved on to Siberia, but not without having the customary experience with smugglers. In Manchuria everything from tobacco to liquor and food, and from clothing to raw materials, is plentiful. In Siberia many of the commonest articles are luxuries. And on every train there are smugglers, Chinamen and Russians who carry everything they can across the border. Two Chinamen climbed on the engine of the Red Cross special train and arrived safely in Siberia. Although they admitted that they had smuggled tobacco and white flour, there was no one at the Siberian station to arrest them and they proceeded on their way as if it were the ordinary thing to do.

It was only a short ride between the two border stations. Before we left Manchuria Herman Bernstein and I were in the office of the stationmaster on the second floor of the depot. A train of box cars arrived. Looking out of the window, the official said:

"Another load of smugglers on their way."

He seemed resigned to his position and to his helplessness. Smuggling in this part of the world is rapidly becoming legitimate, or perhaps I should say legal, because it is now the custom of the country. In normal times smuggling was confined to tobacco, hides, sugar, and flour, but today the stakes are higher. Gold, silver, and platinum, firearms and other weapons bring the greatest rewards and the severest punishment. But the game is worth the gamble.

THE FREE SCHOOLS IN TCHITA.

Tchita is one of the greatest trading centres in Eastern Siberia because years before the Siberian Railroad was constructed the caravan routes of the East centred here. Even today one can see the caravans of camels and others of horses and ponies bringing in raw materials from Mongolia, Manchuria, and Northern Siberia. In several places the Trans-Siberian follows the old caravan routes and from the car window may be seen the slowly moving columns making their way through the snow. The riches of the East still travel this way, because to most communities the railroad is unknown. Glance at the map of Siberia and you will see an empire at least twice as large as the United States. Imagine one railroad running from New York via Chicago to San Francisco and no other railways in the United States, and you will have some idea of the hundreds of thousands of square miles of territory in Siberia without railway communication. In America the railroads cover the country like a fine net. In Siberia the railroad is but a thread. And these caravans which pass through Tchita are the shuttles; the slowly moving shuttles between Tchita and hundreds of cities and towns three thousand miles away.

Tchita, however, despite the fact that it was once the home of exiles, especially the revolutionists of the early nineteenth century, is today a busy city with modern business houses and schools. In Vladivostok and Khabarovsk I had seen similar evidences of progress and modern civilization, but Tchita seemed to have been reserved for the greatest surprise.

I was walking about the city one day when I saw what is now a very usual sight, hundreds of children on their way to school. It is difficult for an American to comprehend Russia's educational system before the war, because only the children of the bourgeoisie could attend. Jewish children and those of the peasants and poor could not go to public school. Education was forbidden to them. But today and only since the revolution education is free to all, and every school house and class room is crowded. None of the schools of Siberia can accommodate all those who wish to attend.

Seeing the children of Tchita, bundled in their torn garments and furs, on their way to school, eager and happy, I followed with several other Americans and entered the gymnasium. One of our party, who spoke Russian, introduced us to the Principal, and we were escorted from class room to class room. Everywhere the condition was the same. The children were crowded in their seats. They were studying arithmetic, reading and writing, and in one room we saw the very limited number of instruments which were used in the physics and astronomical laboratories.

As we were about to leave the Principal escorted us to a large class room in one corner of the big structure. It was a spacious, light room, with various art objects, plaster busts, and the like exhibited on a table along one side. In the centre of the room were some sixty girls standing before their easels drawing or copying a plaster cast hanging on the wall. Here in Tchita, Siberia, the last place in the world that I had expected to find such a thing, was an art school. One who has never been in Siberia, who has imagined it a wilderness and only a prison for political prisoners, can, perhaps, comprehend my astonishment. Art, of all things, in Siberia!

To pass from this scene to the snow-covered streets of the city and see a Russian soldier astride a horse, going from house to house with a telegram, in search of the man to whom it was addressed, was to pass from the sublime to the ridiculous. The soldier had a telegram for an officer whose address was unknown because there was no city directory or police register, and he was searching for him.

BAIKAL'S PEAKS AND CLOUDS.

From Tchita to Irkutsk, the last stage of the journey to be described in this letter, is the Switzerland of Siberia. It is said by all travelers that the Lake Baikal district is the most beautiful section of this great empire. After one has made the journey by day, in Winter, one does not hesitate in joining those who have praised it. To awaken early in the morning, while the train is skirting the shores of the lake, and to see the sun rise behind the snow-covered peaks of the mountains on the other shore, perhaps twenty-five miles across the placid blue water, is to witness one of the most wonderful scenes in the world. Last Winter I was in Switzerland. During the Winter of 1916 and 1917 I traveled through the Transylvania Alps and the mountains of Bavaria. En route to the Far East I crossed the Rockies and the Sierra Nevadas. For grandeur and mass none of the mountain ranges can compare with this, although the Swiss and French Alps are higher, and although the passes through Transylvania are picturesque and beautiful.

I know of no scene to compare with that from the eastern shore of Lake Baikal on a Winter morning before the lake is frozen over. Its massiveness may be comprehended when one realizes that Lake Baikal is one of the five largest lakes in the world; that it is 400 miles long and between 18 and 56 miles wide, with a mountain range nearly a mile high stretching along the western shore like lace against a background of gold and blue clouds. Over the lake the sun appears, copper-gold in color, contrasting sharply with the silver sunrises and sunsets further east, where there are forests of birch.

Into this country some of the allied troops have come. The Japanese flag flies from nearly every station from Vladivostok to Irkutsk. Here and there wave the colors of the Czechoslovaks, the simple red and white banner of the new nation whose army is locked in Siberia. From a few stations and public buildings flies the emblem of free Russia, the white, blue and red. The French Tricolor, the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes are not seen after one leaves Vladivostok, except on passing trains, and the Russians do not understand.

Between Vladivostok and Irkutsk the only evidences of a Russian army are the officers, and there are a sufficient number of these to command two new Russian armies. The privates have all disappeared into private life, excepting those who travel with the officers as orderlies or "guards of honor." Day by day our train passed special trains of Russian officers, attached to this and that army several thousand miles away from the front, transporting artillery and automobiles from town to city and back again. What there is of a Russian army in Eastern Siberia today is on wheels, and, apparently, there is no place to go.

BUSINESSLIKE CZECH SOLDIERS.

With the Czechoslovaks this is not the case. Every one in Russia knows that it is the Czechoslovak army which is keeping the Bolshevist forces out of Siberia. To the Czechs, and to them alone, belongs the credit for the order which exists in East and Western Siberia, except, perhaps, in the few cities where the other Allies are stationed. The Czechs are not strutting on the war stage of the East. They are not asking for praise. Their business is fighting, and they are doing their work splendidly. Enter any Siberian city and call at the Czech headquarters. You will not find a General or even a Colonel or Major in charge. You may find a Captain, but the chances are that a Lieutenant and non-commissioned officer will greet you, because the Czech army is a working army and more attention is paid to work than to rank. Where there are thousands of Russian officers and dozens of privates, there are thousands of Czech soldiers and a few officers. Most of the Czechoslovak army is at the front, the front which they have made in a foreign country, in their fight for their own freedom and independence.

Russia should be indebted to these determined men. The peasants are, but the remnant of the Russian Army are not. They hate the Czechoslovaks and they are suspicious of the Japanese, because they fear the Japanese Army will never withdraw.

In traveling from Vladivostok to Irkutsk, which is about one-half the distance from Vladivostok to Moscow measured by railroad travel before the revolution, these are the things which impress an American:

1. Russia's helplessness; 2. The great price which Russia has paid for free education; 3. The railroad chaos; 4. The good but limited work of America's non-military institutions; 5. The great commercial and agricultural possibilities of Siberia; 6. The extent of Japanese intervention and the democratic self-sacrifice of the Czechoslovak troops.

Siberia, from the box car or the special train is the same. It is a vast empire awakening to the needs of political regeneration, to the demands for free education, to the possibilities from farms and factories, and to the necessity of better railroad communication. Siberia, awakening to these things, finds her country inhabited by foreigners, all of them working in their own way to do what they think should be done, first for their own good and secondly for the good of Siberia. And not until all of these foreign agencies unite upon a plan to help Siberia will this empire be assisted.

Twenty-five years from now—and this is a short time in the life of the world—the friendship of the droshky drivers, of the peasants, trainmen and traders will be a great asset to the Allies if the Allies do not make the Russians pay too dearly for the assistance which they give now.

DEFECTIVE HOOSIERS

The report of the Indiana Committee on Mental Defectives, made to Governor Goodrich, is startling. Something must be done at once about the thousands of them. Every year the solution of the problem is postponed conditions become worse. Defectives become the fathers and mothers of other defectives. The cost of caring for them is thus increased in proportion to the State's inability or reluctance to take the matter in hand and deal with it promptly and properly.

The report indicates that a little more than 2 per cent. of the State's population is mentally defective, that is feebleminded, insane or epileptic. This would give Indiana nearly 60,000 defectives and less than 7,000 are now receiving treatment in State institutions. The others are at large or restrained privately. Most of them are not violent or likely to do bodily harm to any one. They are dangerous, however, to society in general. Some of them commit crimes and then are punished or win their freedom through the pleas that they were not responsible for their acts. The State School for Feeble-Minded at Fort Wayne is taking care of 1,100 patients and the report estimates that there are 20,000 others in Indiana who should have the same care.

Every one knows that insanity is increasing. Insane people are kept in jails when they should not be placed in such institutions. Many of them are housed in poor asylums which were not intended for those who are mentally unbalanced. Caring for the defectives will be costly at first, but it will more than repay the initial investment. The report undoubtedly will be one of the important documents that the coming session of the Legislature will have to consider.—Indianapolis News.

Is your non-freezing mixture a car-wrecker?

MANY chemical non-freezing mixtures now on the market are sure death to a car's cooling system. Most of them contain calcium chloride, which, the U. S. Bureau of Standards warns, "should be used with caution if at all, on account of their corrosive action."

Choking, scaling, rusting, and big bills for repairs next Spring are the ultimate result of using these chemical compounds.

On the other hand, PYRO Alcohol is used by the U. S. Government in its Army, Navy and Post-office motors, because it not only gives certain protection from freezing, but it is actually good for the car cooling system.

PYRO is on sale at garages and filling stations, groceries, department stores, druggists, and paint and hardware stores.

PYRO also makes a wonderful cleaner for windshields and windows, as it does not freeze on the glass. Also a safe and economical fuel for chafing dishes, spirit lamps, percolators, etc.

How To Use PYRO

1. Determine capacity of radiator in gallons.
2. Fill radiator with water.
3. Draw from radiator enough water and substitute same quantity PYRO to meet following conditions:

16⅔% Solution—1 part PYRO and 5 parts water will not freeze at 20 above zero.
20 % Solution—1 part PYRO and 4 parts water will not freeze at 10 above zero.
25 % Solution—1 part PYRO and 3 parts water will not freeze at zero.
33⅓% Solution—1 part PYRO and 2 parts water will not freeze at 10 below zero.
50% Solution—1 part PYRO and 1 part water will not freeze at 25 below zero.

When necessary to replenish, use a mixture of 1 part water and 4 parts PYRO.

THRIFT, OUR NEW NATIONAL VIRTUE

Saving Imposed on Americans by War Needs May Become a Habit Though Peace Has Returned

By JOHN WALKER HARRINGTON.

THE seeds of saving sown a year and a half ago in the United States have sprung into the hardy plants of thrift. No one will yet hail these growths as trees, but see of these days in their branches the birds of peace and plenty may build their nests.

There is no gainsaying that the soil upon which the seed of saving was spread was rich enough, but the tares of waste and extravagance had preempted it for many years. It had been the habit of this country to have seven fat years to be succeeded by seven lean years. The lean kine of finance would appear in 1893 or in 1900, to devour the fat ones; a spasm of panic and remorse would sweep over the nation, and then satin would replace sack-cloth once more and the American people, having saved little and lived far beyond their means, would begin again to wander in the financial wilderness.

As billions of dollars have already been subscribed for Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps, it appears that the people of these United States are saving some money. The question is, Have they developed a national habit of thrift?

Under the familiar slogans of Poor Richard's Almanac and on the anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, a new Thrift Stamp Drive was started a few days since. The economist and publicist left an indelible impress upon the life of this nation, but surely he never taught the most of us to save.

"A man may," Poor Richard used to say, "if he knows not how to save as he gets, keep his nose all his life to the grindstone."

Before the war the people of the United States were regarded as a race of spenders. All classes had the name of living beyond their means, and compared with the frugal French they were considered as wastrels. Although Americans had always invested extensively in the railroad and industrial stocks, their showing at the savings banks was poor in ante-bellum days as shown by the following international thrift record.

Number of savings depositors, per thousand of population, in several countries:

Switzerland	532	Holland	333
Denmark	468	Germany	346
Norway	420	England	320
Sweden	391	Australia	400
Belgium	404	Japan	394
New Zealand	455	Italy	232
France	362	United States	115

The enormous profits which this country gained from the sale of munitions and all manner of supplies increased the output of prodigal sons. The hotels and restaurants were filled with gay throngs who came to eat and drink and dance. The demand for automobiles and furs and diamonds grew apace. Then came that fateful April in 1917 when the United States entered the world conflict. Our young men changed evening clothes for khaki and went from bedizened Broadway to the cantonments.

As a nation we were called to scrimp and save. Old clothes became a badge of honor. A great financier, wearing an overcoat all the worse for several years' wear, crossed the continent, calling on the people to waste no more. Four drives for Liberty Loans and one for War Savings Stamps and demands for scores of wartime charities tugged at the strings of the purse of Fortunatus.

Has anything been left? What of the savings banks? The returns for the year just passed show that their vaults are piled high with the savings of the people. The seed of thrift had fallen on such fertile ground that in the month of January the army of clerks toiled night and day to keep pace with the increasing business. A bulletin of the American Institute of Banking shows enormous increases in 1918 throughout the United States in the per capita savings in banks and trust companies and war savings, as compared with 1914.

The per capita savings in this country had risen from $59.11 in 1914 to $113.45 in 1918, which means a nation at least 20.3 per cent. more thrifty. The analysis of the frugality of the people during the four years when the world was at grips with Germany reveals some startling shifting in economics. The Eastern States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and Washington, D. C., had added to their savings by only 10.7 per cent. in that period. The New England States, regarded long as the citadel of Yankee economy, had added 20.3 per cent. to the individual savings account. The Southern States, whose people are often derided for thriftlessness, increased in savings 44.9 per cent., more than twice that of the New England States, which had had, supposedly, by far a much larger percentage of savers to the population. The Middle West States, increased 39.3 per cent., while the Western States—North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, and Oklahoma—reached the acme, 101.1 per cent., considered as a group. The Pacific States are credited with an increase of 46.9 per cent., but they include the banner saver of all the Union, Arizona, which swings into the thrift column with an increase of 407.6 per cent. per capita.

On the whole, the South, Middle West, and West saved more proportionately in the four years, counting back from 1918, than they did during any other four-year period in their history. The savings banks not only gained in deposits, but large sums were received by newly opened savings departments of commercial banks and trust companies.

On Jan. 1, 1919, the savings banks of Greater New York alone reported a total of $3,435,000,000 on deposit. In six months those institutions had received a total of approximately $50,000,000. Residents of the Borough of Manhattan had saved $23,000,000 in half a year. The Immigrant Bank for Savings took $3,000,000 in new deposits into its vaults in the first ten days of the new year. Note the statement of Henry A. Schenck, the President of that barometer of popular finance, the Bowery Savings Bank, which from Oct. 1, 1918, to Jan. 10, 1919, added $9,000,000 to its coffers to hold for the wage earners:
